LMU holds off Aggies

By DOUG FUENTES
THE BATTALION

Even as the clock hit 0:00 at Reed Arena Sunday at the Texas A&M men's basketball game, the Aggies still had a chance to beat Loyola Marymount and get off to their best start since the 1980-81 season.

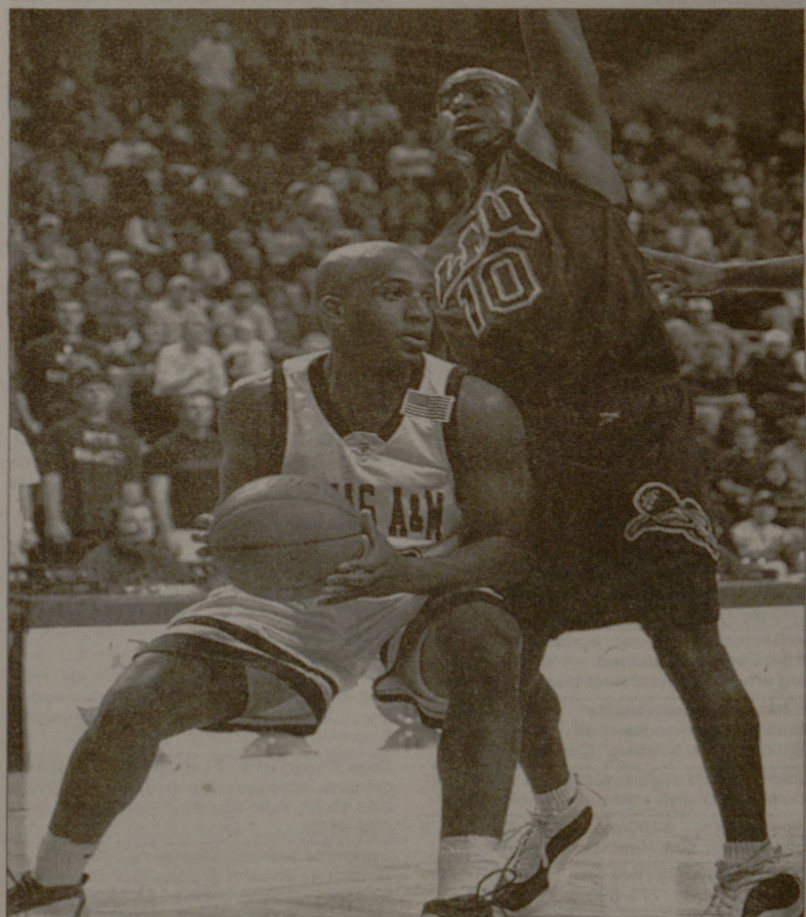

in the game, giving King a chance to shoot three free throws and tie the game, which stood at 80-77.

King made the first free throw but his next two bounced harmlessly off the rim as the Lions held off the Aggies, 80-78, handing A&M its first loss of the season.

"I thought Marcus fouled him," said Loyola Marymount coach Steve Aggers. "We talked about not fouling them if they inbounded the ball behind the three-point line."

"Bernard felt bad about it but that wasn't the game," said A&M men's basketball coach Melvin Watkins. "It shouldn't have ever come down to that. I was concerned more about not being able to stop them."

As it did the entire second half, Loyola Marymount responded by regaining the lead on a layup by Greg Lakey with one second left on the shot clock brought the score to 78-77.

After stopping the Aggies at the other end, the Lions missed the clock once again and hit an important shot when Eurskine Robinson nailed a jumper with two seconds left on the shot clock, giving the Lions a three-point lead at 80-77 with 5.8 seconds left.

The Aggies almost did get a chance to tie the game as senior guard Andy Leatherman was fouled and sent to the free-throw line.

Leatherman missed the first end of the one-and-one, but the ball went out of bounds to the Aggies, setting up King's trip to the free-throw line.
