Gov. Perry appoints Ewing to TCET

By Melissa Sullivan
THE BATTALION

Dr. Richard Ewing, vice president for research at Texas A&M, was appointed by Texas Gov. Rick Perry to the Texas Council on Environmental Technology, a group tasked with fostering and evaluating new technologies in the fight against air and water pollution.

The council, composed of 11 members representing the state's major universities, was formed to help Texas comply with federal Clean Air Act requirements.

"I look forward to being involved with this group as a researcher who has personally worked on environmental problems as well as an administrator with oversight responsibilities," Ewing said. "It is good that the state is serious about addressing these issues that impact the health of our citizens."

The council will also engage in federally funded technology transfer initiatives, recommending the initiation of specific air/water pollution research projects, and will work closely with other organizations such as the Department of Education and the Texas Natural Resource and Conservative Commission.

"We met in early January for the first time. This meeting was for introductions among the members and to discuss plans for the council," Ewing said. "We have our work cut out for us. I am confident the council will be able to accomplish a lot in this arena for the state."

Meat and poultry dept. ranked No. 1

By Anna Chaloupka
THE BATTALION

Texas A&M's meat and poultry science programs were ranked No. 1 among the nation's top 10 universities in 2001 by Meat & Poultry Magazine, a business journal for the meat and poultry industries.

The journal, published out of Kansas City, Mo., ranked the nation's universities by conducting surveys of professionals in the industry to see how each university is perceived in the business community.

Texas A&M's reputation in research, teaching and extension is what put them into the number one spot, according to an article that released the rankings in the November issue of Meat & Poultry.

"The Aggie reputation is rock solid in all three disciplines," the article reads. "Faculty and students are consistently working with professionals in the meat and poultry industry and are active in industry associations and well known in research circles."

The article states that A&M offers well-rounded programs in meat, poultry and food science, programs that few schools can rival.

Chuck Jolley, publisher for Meat & Poultry, said in addition to talking with professionals in the industry, the magazine asked professors at major universities what they thought was most important to building a top-ranked meat science department.

"They (professors) told us to look at the quality of the teaching staff, the size of the department and its history of turning out well-trained, talented students," Jolley said.

Texas A&M's faculty along with their research are what put the school in the leading position, Jolley said.

"The quality of the teaching staff as well as the quality of the research done at Texas A&M gave them the nod," Jolley said.

Dr. Jeff Savell, the meat science section leader in the Department of Animal Science at A&M, said the spirit of the faculty and students is what has given A&M a strong reputation in producing qualified graduates.

"Our faculty loves to teach," Savell said, "and we have great students who understand work and loyalty. That is what made this ranking occur."
