NEWS IN BRIEF

New Mexico plane crash kills one

FARMINGTON, N.M. (AP) — A single-engine plane crash-landed Tuesday just short of a runway at Four Corners Regional Airport, killing one of the two men aboard. Passenger Jim Harrell, 53, of Canyon, Texas, died in the emergency room of San Juan Regional Medical Center, said Farmington Fire Chief Tom Aurnhammer. The pilot, Kevin Phillips, 40, of Amarillo, Texas, was in critical condition Tuesday, hospital spokeswoman Rhonda Schaefer said. Aurnhammer said the two men suffered "multiple traumatic injuries" in the crash of the Cessna Cardinal 177 shortly after 10 a.m. Tuesday.

It took rescue workers about a half hour to remove the men from the wreckage, then they used high-angle ropes to move the gurneys up the bluff one at a time to the airport, authorities said. The plane fell short of the runway as it approached the airport, which sits on top of a bluff, authorities said. The plane crashed about 10 feet to 15 feet from the top of the bluff. "Our airport is somewhat elevated on a mesa. ... It hit the lip of the mesa" as it came in for a landing, Farmington police Sgt. Brian McAchran said. The flight originated from the Tradewinds Airport near Amarillo, airport general manager Les Byram said. Federal Aviation Administration officials from Albuquerque and National Transportation Safety Board investigator were expected to investigate the crash.

Ft. Worth nuclear facility violates regulations

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The Comanche Peak nuclear power plant was cited by federal regulators for repeated, improper handling of low-level radioactive waste. The commission found instances of violations between Jan. 24, 2000 and May 24, 2001. Officials of TXU said they would prove that safety was not compromised.
