REEL CRITIQUE

Time Machine
Directed by: Simon Wells
Starring: Guy Pearce and Samantha Mumba
Dreamworks Pictures

Hopeful young scientist Alex (Pearce) journeys back and forth around the clock in The Time Machine, hoping to change the past and re-invent the future. The film blends action, romance and horror into a science fiction adventure that is heavy on the fiction and not on the science.

This movie tells a story — an unpredictable, intriguing story — without turning into a lecture on the physics and philosophy of time travel. Unlike other time travel movies, this one DOES not get bogged down in the rocket-science details of trying to determine nonsense such as, "If Alex goes back in time and meets his past self, will the universe explode?"

Alex tries to prevent a horrible accident by building a time machine and going back to the night of the catastrophe only to find tragedy still strikes.

Set in New York City in the late 19th century, the 21st century and so far into the future that time must be measured in hundreds of millennia, the filmmakers have created a visually-entertaining movie aside from any plot and dialogue considerations. Alex sees the evolution of technology and society and the work of geology, all from his time-defying contraption. Instead of having Alex overwhelmed by suddenly living in an electronic and automated New York City or a retrograde planet Earth, the character stays focused on his goals, and, yet while awed, is no less determined. In this film, plot and production make up for what is lacking in script and performance (Grade: B)
