Sheriff killed by sniper's bullet at political rally

SOMERSET, Ky. (AP) — A rural sheriff who had just given a campaign speech at a political rally and fish fry was killed by a sniper, and a suspect then fled on a motorcycle belonging to one of the victim's election opponents.

The motorcyclist was charged in the slaying Sunday. Authorities said they were investigating whether he knew the owner of the vehicle, although they said the latter was not a suspect.

"The senseless murder or assassination of our sheriff, who always had a smile on his face and dedication in his heart, is devastating to the community," said former county attorney Fred Neikirk.

Sheriff Sam Catron was killed by a single rifle bullet Saturday evening as he was leaving the rally at Shopville, a small town about 70 miles south of Lexington among Pulaski County's rolling farmland and wooded hills.

State Police Capt. Paul Hays said the shot came from "a considerable distance." Police said a rifle was found but would not give details about the weapon.

Hays would not comment on a possible motive.

Police said a sheriff's deputy and firefighter caught Danny S. Shelley, 30, of Eubank, about five miles from the rally when he wrecked the motorcycle that belonged to Jeff Morris, one of four people challenging Catron, 48, in the May 28 Republican primary.

Hays said Morris, who had been at the rally, had not reported the motorcycle stolen. Asked if Morris and Shelley knew each other, Hays said, "that part of the investigation that we're following up on."

Brian Perkins, a former classmate of Shelley, said he was "a jolly kid" who went to work in Georgetown, near Lexington, after graduating from high school. Shelley's high school yearbook called him one of the sweetest guys in Pulaski County.

Morris was a sheriff's deputy under Catron from 1998 to July 2001, said Jim McWhorter, the chief deputy sworn in as sheriff Saturday night. McWhorter would not comment on Morris' reasons for leaving the sheriff's office.
