Small plane hits Milan building Police see no terrorist link

MILAN, Italy (AP) - A small plane, in flames and sending a distress signal, smashed into the tallest skyscraper in Italy's financial capital Thursday, killing at least three people and injuring 60. The crash initially raised fears of a Sept. 11-type terror attack, but the Italian government said it was probably an accident. The aircraft punched through the 25th floor of the slim Pirelli building, gutting two floors and starting a fire that sent smoke pouring out into the clear blue sky over downtown Milan. Emergency workers helped bloodied men in business suits while firefighters worked to put out the blaze. "I heard something like the engine of a plane dying out, and then I heard a terrible explosion," said Raffaele Taccogna, who was tending bar at the nearby Atlantic Hotel. "I certainly thought of the September attacks in the United States," he said. "It really looked like the same thing.' The pilot — who was on a 20-minute flight from Locarno, Switzerland, to Milan — issued a distress signal and reported problems with the plane's landing gear moments before plowing into the 30-story building at 5:50 p.m., Milan police officer

Celerissimo De Simone said. The pilot reported "a little problem with the landing gear," and the control tower instructed him to move to the west of the airport until it was fixed, a statement from the association said. It said that the pilot did not issue a distress signal as officials had previously reported. The control tower contacted the pilot again after seeing he was drifting to the north, in the wrong direction.

The pilot said he was fixing the problem, and the tower instructed him to move back into position to land. But the pilot again did not get into the right position, it said. The control tower then lost contact.

One witness, Fabio Sunik, said the plane was on fire before it crashed. The plane did not try to change course, "but just went straight in," said Sunik, a sports journalist. "Then I saw rubble still there when the crash took place — not long after working hours ended.

Milan's main train station, about 200 yards away from the skyscraper, was evacuated for security reasons, and no trains were running from there. Afterhours trading was suspended on the Milan stock market, which was already closed for the day.

sulate spokesperson. President Bush was quickly notified of the collision, press secretary Ari Fleischer said. The FBI was assisting in the investigation. In Washington, a senior Bush administration official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Italian officials had told the the building, which houses United States that a mechanical local government offices, but it problem not related to terrorism

Smokers likely to have baby girls

LONDON (AP) — Couples are more likely to have a girl than a boy if either of the partners smoked heavily while they were trying to conceive, new research suggests.

Some scientists consider the ratio of male to female births to be an indicator of a population's health, because male sperm and embryos are more fragile than their female counterparts. The study published this week in The Lancet medical journal is the first to propose that smoking may play a role. Normally, boys have a slight edge over girls, with almost 52 percent of all babies born worldwide being male. The balance tends to even out few decades and researchers suspect toxic substances may be partly to blame.

Dr. Henrik Moller, who has conducted extensive research on sex ratios but was not connected with the latest study, said the findings "fit with what is already known about certain exposures, certainly in the male."

The sex ratio is the proportion of one sex to the other in a given population and is expressed as the number of males for every 100 females.

The sex ratio at birth in most countries is between 104 and 106 males to 100 females. It fluctuates within a narrow range from time to time in some areas but the general trend of the last 20 years has been downward.

"The decline is absolutely minuscule, but it's there. It's genuine," said William James, a researcher at University College
