'Soft walls' stock cars debut set for Indy

The new "soft-wall" technology used successfully in the Indianapolis 500 will get its first NASCAR race test on the same track, although wide use of the system is not expected for at least a year.

The barrier at Indy will remain in place for the Aug. 4 Brickyard 400 but will need extra padding for the heavier stock cars, NASCAR officials said Tuesday. The Indy cars weigh about 2,000 pounds, including the driver, while stock cars are about 3,600 pounds.

The foam pads at all four turns of the 2 1/2-mile Indianapolis Motor Speedway will be thickened from 16 inches to about 26 inches.

While development is progressing well, the walls are not ready for use at other tracks, said Dr. Dean Sicking, head of the research group developing the Steel and Foam Energy Reduction (SAFER) barrier at the University of Nebraska.

"It's being pursued aggressively, but we want to be prudent and reasonable so we get the best results possible for our competitors," he said.

The SAFER is four steel tubes welded in 20-foot sections and bolted to the concrete walls. Between the steel and the concrete, pads of hard, pink foam are placed 10 feet apart, allowing the surface to bend and thereby reduce force.

The still-experimental energy absorbing system was subjected to eight hard hits at Indy without serious injuries.

Sicking pointed out that Eliseo Salazar hit the wall backward during testing just before the barrier was installed and, with a peak of about 115 G's, came away with a season-ending injury.

Robby McGehee crashed at virtually the same spot on the track after the SAFER barrier was installed. His peak G's were about 75 and McGehee and was back in a car trying to qualify for the race just one week later.

"We believe those crashes were almost identical," Sicking said. "It's very promising in that the safety performance was very good and it helps us understand better these rearward hits."

Sicking and George Pyne, senior vice president of NASCAR, emphasized that more testing and development work needs to be done before other tracks get the "soft walls."

"The Indianapolis installation is only the first step in a very long process," Pyne said. "We've gone through extensive trial and error and we've found that soft doesn't always mean safe."

Bob Bahre, owner of New Hampshire International Speedway where Adam Petty and Kenny Irwin were both killed in crashes two years ago, has expressed strong interest in having the SAFER barrier installed at his 1.058-mile oval as soon as possible.

He will have to wait until at least 2003. Sicking said there are still significant problems to work on for tracks of varying lengths, which effect the way the SAFER barrier is installed and how it will react in a crash.

"We really have to test these issues using full-scale crash testing before we would recommend the use of these barriers on any short radius track," Sicking said.

There is also the issue of banking, with the race surface on many tracks in the United States ranging from virtually flat to a steep 35 degrees that could inhibit repairs to the wall after a crash.

"At Indy, they have 10- or 11-degree banking and you can drive truck right up and work on it," Sicking said. "That wouldn't be possible at Talladega, where the track has 33-degree banking. We need to find a way of making those repairs in a reasonable manner so we wouldn't have to delay the race for 30 minutes."

Upset

"The team played with a lot of confidence and, especially, a lot of discipline."

Needing only a draw to advance, the Danes got goals from Dennis Rommedahl in the 22nd minute and Jon Dahl Tomasson on a counterattack in the 67th. It was Tomasson's fourth goal in three games.

While the French could not convert at all, Tomasson connected on a rare opportunity. In fact, the Danes scored on their only two shots on goal.

"I had a difficult time today," Tomasson said, "and nine out of 10 times I didn't have a chance to reach the ball. I just had to keep working, working."

Denmark earlier beat Uruguay 2-1 and tied 1-1 with Senegal.

Senegal gained its 3-0 lead on a penalty by Khalilou Fadiga in the 20th minute and goals by Papa Bouba Diop in the 26th and 38th.

In the second half, Uruguay had goals by Richard Morales in the 46th minute and Diego Forlan in the 69th, and tied the game on Alvaro Recoba's penalty kick in the 88th.

Uruguay narrowly missed advancing instead of Senegal in the first minute of injury time. Senegal's Lamine Diatta headed a shot off the line and, starting at an open net, Morales sent a close-in header wide.

The Final Four? This may be the best stage for sports in America. Non-compensated players playing for the love of the game is about as good as it gets. Unfortunately, no one in Spain or Slovenia cares whether or not Duke wins an NCAA championship, and that is where the World Cup is different.

Much like the Olympics, the world watches what is happening. With over 20 million players (and who knows how many more fans) in 140 countries, soccer has the broadest following of any sport out there, and the only time millions of fans come together at the same time for the same purpose is the World Cup.

Interesting fact: when host France beat Brazil to claim the 1998 World Cup, over one million fans went to the street in France to celebrate. To put that into perspective, consider that the Aggies drew an average of 82,711 fans in six games at Kyle Field last season, totaling just under 500,000. That total is less than half the number of French fans that poured into the streets four years ago after the World Cup.

It is a safe bet something similar will happen after the 2002 champion is crowned later this month, the exact reason the World Cup is the greatest show on earth.
