candidate could get a feel for how the campus felt about parking - a dual exchange of ideas and issues was able to take place.

Search committee members met with the candidates at the end of their stay to take care of final questions.

After reviewing all the feedback forms from parties interested in voicing their opinion on the potential directors, the search committee submitted its recommendation to Vice President for Administration Chuck Sippial. Sippial and other administrators then made their final decision, selecting Weis.

Reasons for selection of the current director of Georgia Tech's Parking and Transportation Services include his implementation of a customer online service.

This service gives customers 24 hour access to their information, allowing them to buy parking permits, view possible citations, file appeals and take care of payments, among other services.

Weis said changes to A&M's current system will have to be implemented over a large time span, though he hopes the online citation payment and an e-mail notification system may begin sometime this fall.

Looking back at previous statements from Sippial and Bisor, incoming Weis also looks to be a strong match to their ideal individual with a customer-service emphasis and priority.

In a previous interview, Sippial said, "I will be looking for strong management and leadership skills as well as a strong background in customer service... I want to maximize customer service and in the process, make getting customers to their destination our number one priority."

Weis described himself as very customer-driven, an attitude which often put students at ease as they walked into Georgia Tech's Parking Office.

He hopes to improve and maintain a quality relationship between students and PTTS by keeping communication lines open. His high level of involvement shows not only in the quantity of articles he was quoted in The Technique, Georgia Tech's campus newspaper, but in his dedication towards keeping students informed.

"I love working with students, reaching out to them... if I haven't been invited to student government meetings, I will try to go there and try to meet student leadership. There's no way to solve a problem unless you talk about it and everyone understands."

"Someone asked how I felt about coming over to A&M and -in one word - excited," said Weis.

Fees

"If everyone paid the there would be less for each dents to pay," Wilson said. "I think that it would be fair for students at A&M to contribute the improvements the fees produce."

The average increase in for an incoming student is 20 cent.

"Eight million dollars will produced from the new fees. Dr. Bowen committed 10 per to add to financial aid," Kram said. "The new financial money will be split between undergraduates and graduate dents."

State-mandated tuition University-authorized tuition increase by two dollars. There also be a few adjustments in and course fees, but those will course specific fees, Krumm

Presently, there is not an apated University-wide increase of this size in the four years.

Brian Allen, a senior medical engineering major, feels he made a good decision in assess the fees to new students only.

"I think it shows that A& was concerned about the effect adding the new fees to studen who already have time and money invested in their degree," Allen said.

"New students and studen who are returning for a high degree have the chance to make their decision about beginning returning for a higher degree, full knowledge of the charges."

NEWS IN BRIEF

US Airways files for bankruptcy

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (AP) - US Airways, hurt by slumping travel after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection Sunday, the company said.

The first major carrier to declare bankruptcy since the attacks, US Airways said all flights are expected to continue without interruption.

Although US Airways didn't lose any Sept. 11, its business was severely hurt when Reagan National Airport, the airline's main hub, was shut down for three weeks and reopened with only a limited schedule.

The Arlington, Va.-based airline said it received $500 million in private financing to keep operating while it reorganizes.

Bioweapons expert says he had nothing to do with letters

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (AP) - A bioweapons expert under scrutiny for the anthrax attacks denied any involvement with the tainted letters and said Sunday he had cooperated with investigation only to see his life and work destroyed through speculation and innuendo.

Dr. Steven J. Hatfill said he understood that expertise in germ warfare would force him answer questions about last fall's attacks, said he had never worked with anthrax and that was not a "shred of evidence" he was involved
