Replant

World War I are examples of traditions similar to Replant.

Justin Squares, a sophomore molecular and cell biology major and Moses Hall resident, said although Replant is a good tradition, it is unable to fill the void left by Bonfire.

"It is a good thing to bring everybody together and work hard together, but it isn't something to do every weekend like Bonfire ... it's just different," Squares said.

Squares, along with 40 members from Moses, planted 20 trees.

Most planting groups were made up of at least one member from the more than 80 organizations represented this year and representatives were grouped into four or five people per tree. Thaxton said, on average, a group of five people planted three trees and took approximately an hour.

Survey shows little support for statewide testing

AUSTIN (AP) — Most Texas school districts don't support statewide testing of high school athletes for steroids and do not consider it a problem, according to a survey released Sunday.

Conducted by the University Interscholastic League, the governing body of Texas high school sports, the survey found most school districts believe any testing should be handled locally. It also showed that fewer than 20 percent already conduct drug tests.

The UIL conducted the survey to gauge the need to test for steroids and performance-enhancing drugs at the recommendation of its medical advisory panel.

Steroid use among professional athletes became a national controversy last summer after a Sports Illustrated article reported a former player's allegations of widespread use in Major League Baseball.

The survey was sent to every school district superintendent last month and more than 1,000 responded.

Of the 1,018 who answered the question of whether their school had a problem with performance-enhancing drugs, 903 said no compared to just 54 who said they did. The rest had no opinion.

The survey also asked if drug testing should be left to local discretion. Of the 1,015 who answered that question, 851 said yes; 135 responded no. Only 29 had no opinion.

The numbers were much different when it came to pointing the finger at other schools and drug testing during playoffs.

The survey asked superintendents if they suspected steroids at other schools; 392 said yes compared to 355 who said no, with 287 having no opinion.

females who swam 100 meters and ran for one mile, in the modified, Hanken said, and softball games were played on Saturday, so all awards were based on Friday's standings, Hanken said.

"There were about 500 to 600 people in the audience cheering at awards, when usually they would still be watching softball games," Hanken said.

A victory dance with a DJ was held on Saturday night at Reed Arena.

"It's the official closing of games where every one less steam and has fun before they have to pack up and head home on Sunday," Pittinger said.

school, said the building will serve as a place for quality graduate education.

"The most rewarding aspect of the addition is that it shows our students, business partners, recruiters and prospective students that we are serious about making a commitment toward business education," Strawie said. "We want to provide our students the tools and technologies they need to be successful in the business world."
