believed to be 17, also could face death under state law, but Neely said his sentence would depend on his role in the shootings.

Virginia and Alabama, where the pair are charged with killing a woman at a liquor store in September, allow the death penalty for crimes committed at age 17. Malvo would be one year shy of the death penalty in Maryland. There is no death penalty in the District of Columbia, where one person was killed.

Justice Department officials also could bring federal charges against the suspects, who are in federal custody, based on a law that allows the government to seek the death penalty for killers who try to extort money. Letters left behind in the sniper slayings demanded $10 million.

In Maryland, Montgomery County State's Attorney Douglas Gansler acknowledged Sunday that the toughest sentence Malvo could get in Maryland, if convicted, would be life without the possibility of parole, but he defended his county's right to prosecute the suspects.

"It's the epicenter of this investigation and these crimes," Gansler said on ABC's "This Week." "And we feel that that's where the most appropriate place to prosecute the case. We also have the best evidence."

He said he also expects Maryland's moratorium on executions to be lifted.

Kilgore said that he had spoken with White House and Justice Department officials and that the federal government has been cooperative with Virginia. He said that means "no federal charges at least until we've filed our indictment and get our process going here in Virginia."

Virginia and Maryland authorities have not had the same working relationship, he said.

"We haven't been able to share a lot of information and receive a lot of information from the Maryland side," he said. "It's just not as much cooperation is going on as I believe ought to be going on."

Also Sunday, a man being held in Michigan as a witness in the case agreed to be moved to Maryland for questioning. Nathaniel O. Osbourne, 26, co-owner of the Chevrolet Caprice used by the sniper suspects, has been cooperating with investigators since his arrest Saturday. Officials say he is not a suspect in the attacks.

Maryland's death penalty law requires that a case meet one of 10 specific circumstances, including if a defendant commits more than one first-degree murder arising out of the same incident.

Gansler says the case meets that standard because on Oct. 3 four people were killed in Montgomery County.

Virginia has a much broader statute for executions, including provisions for killers who commit more than one murder in three years and those with the "intent to intimidate the civilian population."

school, Olivas said.

"Just because 100,000 people take the LSAT doesn't mean there will be 100,000 applications sent out. Students can apply to several schools and some may not apply at all," Olivas said. "The admissions process is an art, not a science."

While the exact number for the October LSAT has not yet been posted, the LSAC Web site shows that for the June test date in 1998-1999, 18,933 people took the LSAT. That number rose to 27,808 for June 2002.

Many students are taking prep courses like those offered by the Princeton Review because higher scores are needed to remain competitive.

Senior animal science major Jennifer Jones took the LSAT this month. She said the pressure students are facing this year when applying to law school is immense.

"I took a Princeton Review course to help me raise my LSAT score," Jones said. "This year, your LSAT scores need to be higher, your application needs to look better and you have to be at your best to remain competitive."

NEWS IN BRIEF

Study says acetaminophen, ibuprofen may be linked to high blood pressure in women

CHICAGO (AP) — The popular pain relievers ibuprofen and acetaminophen, contained in scores of over-the-counter remedies, may increase the risk of high blood pressure, a study in women suggests.

Skeptics say the link is flimsy and needs confirmation in better-designed studies, and even the Harvard researchers who conducted the study do not recommend that people stop taking the medications. But the authors add that their findings are plausible given what's known about how the drugs affect the body.

The study, in Monday's Archives of Internal Medicine, involved 80,020 women aged 31 to 50 who participated in a nurses' health study and had not been diagnosed with high blood pressure at the outset. They were asked in 1995 about their use of painkillers. Information about high blood pressure was obtained from a survey two years later.

have, but a higher tax," he said.

Cronkite has interviewed every president since Harry Truman. Ronald Reagan was the most entertaining president and Jimmy Carter was the most intelligent.

"(Carter) had the ability to absorb huge documents word for word," Cronkite said.

He said he was lucky to have good journalism teachers and editors who taught him the principles of his work.

Cronkite began his career as a journalist in the 1930s. In 1938, he was hired by CBS as a reporter. In 1954, he anchored the first evening news program on television.

During his career, Cronkite covered events such as World War II bombings, the Nuremberg Trials, the acceleration of space program and the lunar landing, the assassinations of former President Kennedy, Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and Robert Kennedy, Watergate, and, most recently, Sen. John Glenn's return to space.

Over the past 20 years, Cronkite has been honored with numerous awards, including multiple Emmys.

According to Time Magazine, Cronkite is "the single most convincing and authoritative figure in television news."

Rojo del Busto said he has always strived to give the best of his talents, time and knowledge.

"Personally and professionally, I have always guided my life by a very simple principle: be an example to my family, an example to the community and above all, be an example to myself," he said.

"This is not the end for me, but just the beginning of working towards bringing together Spain and Texas A&M," he said. "I enjoy bringing together the two cultures."
