 happy to be there. He's just beside himself now."
 The source declined to comment on the charges against Bice.
 According to police records, the Lambda Chi Alpha president found the videotape and notified the president of the woman's sorority. The woman later contacted Bice and asked if he had shown the videotape to anyone.
 "This crime is a state jail felony and you can receive up to two years in a state jail," Sigler said.

"(Bice's punishment) is up to the court, but people always get probation unless that is violated."

Bice was released from the Brazos County Jail on Thursday after posting a $28,000 bond, Dicky said.

Incidents similar to this one, involving secretly videotaping others, were not illegal until this year, Sigler said. In several cases, people installed cameras while tenants were gone and then videotaped them.

"What those people did wasn't burglary or trespassing, so the legislature had to pass a new law making this type of activity illegal," Sigler said.

Bice could not be reached for comment.

ROI

 Carroll Scherer, incoming director of the MBA program, said rankings are often used by prospective students to choose a business school to attend.
 "Since the Business Week results indicate that the Mays Business School is of great value, this will attract the top students to the MBA program," Scherer said.
 Kristin Aubel, a sophomore undergraduate in the business school, said the rankings make her want to stay at A&M for graduate school.
 "It peaks my interest and raises the possibility of my attending A&M's MBA program," Aubel said.
 Despite the Enron debacle and the drastic downturn in the economy, undergraduate business majors and MBA students alike can expect a 66.2 percent salary increase and a median starting salary of $71,200 upon graduation, according to a comprehensive survey of recent Mays MBA graduates.
 A recent improvement to the business school's format may relieve doubt among students. The new modular format implemented this year includes week-long intercession breaks that allow students to different companies and corporations. Corporate involvement in the MBA program has risen in recent years and gives students hands-on experience with different businesses, Scherer said.
 "With a strong commitment toward preparing students to face the challenges of today's globally-oriented businesses, the program focuses on producing students who are experienced, hardworking and committed, accomplished communicators, ethical, globally aware, team oriented and technologically competent," Scherer said.

Northwestern University's Kellogg Business School was ranked number one overall by Business Week. The only other Texas school to make any of the rankings was the McCombs Business School at the University of Texas, which wasn't ranked for return on investment.

Ranked number four in steepest decline, UT's school fell from an overall rank of 17 last year to 21 this year and was ranked number one in need of improvement. The Mays Business School did not appear in any other Business Week rankings.

 after the beat of Kool & the Gang's "Celebration" and Bachman Turner Overdrive's "Taking Care of Business" had faded from the warehouse.
 At a stop in Austin with attorney general candidate Kirk Watson, Kirk was introduced by Luci Baines Johnson, the daughter of former President Lyndon B. Johnson, and invoked LBJ's name several times.

University of Texas-Pan American political scientist Jerry Polinar said the races were difficult to analyze in part because it was hard to tell how much the diverse Democratic ticket, which includes Sanchez, who is Hispanic, and Kirk, who is black, would play a role in bringing more minorities to the polls this year.

Bonfire

Tucker said SGA is working with the construction company operating at the Bonfire site to clear any remaining construction by Nov. 17.

"Construction is winding down and isn't on the spot of the collapse," Tucker said.

Bad weather, which left thousands of students soaked and puddling through the mud of the Polo Fields during the remembrance in 2001 could pose a similar problem this year's events, Tucker said.
 "It was raining two days ago during the remembrance and if the weather is bad we may have to change our plans," Tucker said.

Tucker said the recent construction of the detention pond at the Polo Fields could hinder accessibility to the Bonfire area after heavy rains. Once completed the pond will not be located near the site of the collapse, he said.

J.J. Washam, a senior construction science major and Corps of Cadets member, spent five days in the hospital after being injured in the collapse. He said that he is going to attend reception and a Corps of Cadets observance.

Brad Shipman, chairman of the Bonfire Coalition of Students and a sophomore environmental design major, said the coalition isn't planning an observance of its own because they did not want to interfere with SGA plans.

Shipman said the coalition will hand out maroon ribbons around campus and will attach a slip of paper with a name of a Bonfire victim on each ribbon.

"We want to recognize individuals killed or hurt in the collapse," Shipman said.

Nicholas Albertini, a member of MSC LEAD and a junior medical sciences major, said the MSC LEAD program includes a forum and videos aimed at educating freshmen and sophomores about what Bonfire was like. The forum will begin at 6 p.m. Nov. 17 at the MSC, he said.

available from the IRS.
 Larry Lightfoot, president of the BBB for the Brazos Valley, said an adequate charity will give 10 percent of a donation to the programs it carries out. Other donors are misled and their money will be used for advertising or other expenses, he said.

"People need help and we want to help them, but at the same time (by) ensuring that their money goes to the right places," he said.
