Royals coach accepts apology from teen

CHICAGO (AP) — Kansas City Royals coach Tom Gamboa said he accepts the apology of a 15-year-old fan who attacked him on the field during a game and hopes the boy learns from his "tragic mistake."

Gamboa said Thursday he would like to see the boy receive probation and community service because he was already held for a month in juvenile detention after the September attack at Comiskey Park.

"I can't see a 15- or 16-year-old kid being thrown down the drain for making a tragic mistake," Gamboa said while testifying at the teen's sentencing hearing.

Gamboa, himself a father of five, added afterward: "I sure hope he turns out OK."

The boy apologized to Gamboa during the start of the hearing in juvenile court. The hearing will resume Friday.

"Being incarcerated has made me realize how stupid my actions were," said the boy, whose name is being withheld because of his age.

The boy was released to his family last month after pleading guilty Oct. 21 to one count of aggravated battery and two counts of mob action in the Sept. 19 attack during a game against the Chicago White Sox. Gamboa was coaching at first base when it occurred.

The boy's father, William

Ligue Jr., 35, also was charged. He has pleaded innocent to three felony counts of aggravated battery and one felony count of mob action.

Ligue has been in custody at Cook County Jail since the attack and on Thursday a judge agreed to reduce his bail to $10,000 from $200,000, said Jerry Lawrence, a spokesman with the Cook County State's Attorney's office.

A spokesman for the Cook County Sheriff's Office said Ligue had not posted bond by late afternoon.

In his apology, the boy told the court Gamboa did nothing to provoke the attack.

Following their arrests, the father and son, both shirtless, contended Gamboa had made an obscene gesture.

Gamboa said he was glad the boy's apology made it clear he had done nothing to antagonize them.

"That's just not a part of who I am," Gamboa said.

The coach talked about the attack that he said "felt like I got hit by a truck."

His head hit the ground so hard, he said that he temporarily lost his hearing. He also suffered cuts and bruises.

Gamboa, now the Royals' bullpen coach, said he hopes this incident is a wake-up call for the teen.

"I hope this is the fork in the road that prompts him to go the right way," Gamboa said.
