MTV, VH1 and CMT are all popular television channels that base their content around music videos. Directors, producers and artists spend many hours and thousands of dollars on these short pieces of media, and yet many of them don't get the recognition they deserve. Clipland.com offers fans a chance to learn about these people and other little-known facts about their favorite music videos.

While it doesn't limit itself to only music videos - TV commercials and movie trailers are among the media included on the site - Clipland offers a free textual database of facts about videos. Information listed in the database includes director, date of release and technical specifications. Some videos have streaming, live-video feeds and still images. Visitors can review the video and discuss it on the site's message boards.

The site is growing and there are still hundreds of music videos not included in the database. Visitors are encouraged to help add items to the database to make it the most accurate and comprehensive site of its kind on the Internet.

This site has potential. Once it gets more videos added to the database, and the holes in current data are fixed, it will be a great resource to any music video fan. Until that time, though, it is simply a good idea in the making.

Tests are a dreaded part of college life. Students go to class (or not), take notes and inevitably a test is given. Despite the horror of tests and the dread that comes with them, online tests are insanely popular.

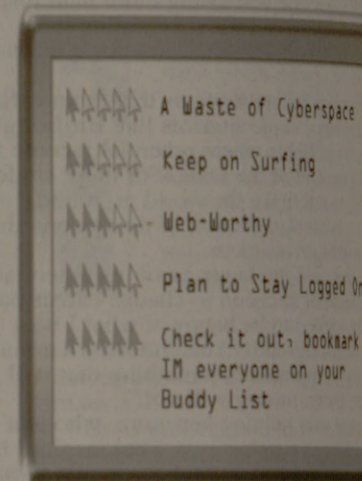

Personality tests, IQ tests, purity tests, "Which 'Friends' character are you?" tests, etc. pop up everywhere you turn. The pull of online tests seems to be too strong to resist, if for no other reason than to increase one's time spent procrastinating.

Along comes AllTheTests.com, the ultimate collection of tests, to help Web surfers kill time. This site is the place to find any type of quiz you could possibly wish to take, or if you can't find the one you want, make one yourself.

Find little known facts about yourself through the tests featured on AllTheTests.com. Some of the tests are quite serious and have educational value.

Others are frivolous and clearly just for fun. The site lists the tests by category, giving a description that includes how much time it will take to complete. The site was recently listed by Yahoo! Internet Life as a "Useful Link," and it is indeed that. Go check out this site and take some tests that you don't have to cram for.

PEOPLE IN THE NEWS

Marley's daughter opens clothing line

KINGSTON, Jamaica (AP) - Bob Marley's Grammy award-winning daughter, Cedella, took a break from singing reggae tunes to present her own clothing line at a fashion show.

She says she designs for women with an eye for the adventurous, but doesn't want her Catch A Fire line to be boxed into any category.

"I wouldn't classify it as anything - I don't like to classify," said Marley, 35, who has no formal training as a designer. She spoke by telephone from her Miami home

"My clothing is for people who want to express their individuality."

The collection was shown Saturday in Kingston as part of Caribbean Fashionweek.

Strong on denim with an urban theme, the Catch A Fire line has caught on with celebrities in the United States, including singer Gwen Stefani of No Doubt and actress Angela Bassett.

Winfrey donates scholarship money

CLEVELAND (AP) - Talk show host Oprah Winfrey stunned a college audience with a major donation for scholarships.

While giving the keynote speech at Cuyahoga Community College's scholarship luncheon, Winfrey offered to match the $600,000 the event was expected to raise for scholarships.

She said her donation was a tribute to the dual forces that have shaped her life.

"All that I am or will ever become is because of my spiritual foundation and my educational foundation," Winfrey said Friday.

College President Jerry Sue Thornton was as surprised as everyone else.

"We had no idea," Thornton said. "This means so much. We had to turn away students who wanted to come in the fall because we didn't have enough scholarship money."

The two-year college has more than 20,000 students. Winfrey has been friends for 15 years with the Rev. Otis Moss, a Baptist minister who co-sponsored the luncheon.
