That official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said neither the United States nor its allies envisions using NATO's military capacity to help enforce the resolution.

On the summit's opening day, Bush sought out his most supportive allies — and froze out the reluctant ones — to urge a united stance against Saddam.

"If he chooses not to disarm, we will work with our close friends, the closest of which is Great Britain, and we will disarm him," the president said after meeting with British Prime Minister Tony Blair.

Blair said his country "will do what's

When bringing people into an institution, the panelists agreed, the institution is responsible for their well-being.

"The more people you bring into an institution, the more the institution has to change to make them welcome," Kendall said. "That is not always initially understood."

Panelists also addressed how traditions at A&M may affect the future of diversity at the school.

"A&M is deeply rooted in tradition," Coleman said. "Students can start new traditions incorporating diversity."

Cynthia Rocha, director of diversity & work force development for HEB, said traditions that were to A&M's benefit in the past could be to its detriment necessary" to enforce the U.N. resolution.

The United Nations has given Saddam until Dec. 8 to list his weapons of mass destruction. The White House says his holdings are vast, and failure to report any of them could trigger war.

While Bush told leaders Saddam may avert war by complying, Condoleezza Rice said there's little chance of that.

"We haven't seen anything yet which suggests that Iraq is a leopard that's changing its spots," said Bush's national security adviser.

Meeting beneath the tall spires of this Bohemian city, few NATO leaders joined Bush and Blair in speaking forcefully against Iraq — a sign that while allies support the U.N. effort in theory, they're highly skeptical about fighting Saddam.

"Our position is completely clear: we will not take part in a military strike against Iraq," German Foreign Minister Joschka Fischer said.

In private talks, French President Jacques Chirac told Bush that a war against Iraq requires a second U.N. Security Council resolution, putting him at odds with Blair's position.

Canadian Defense Minister Paul Martin also expressed caution. He would prefer a NATO-led operation against Iraq to a U.S.-led mission, but "Our first choice is that there's no operation at all."

NEWS IN BRIEF

Disease outbreaks from wells, swimming pools rising

ATLANTA (AP) — Outbreaks of disease from drinking water and swimming pools have risen dramatically in recent years despite improvements in publicly operated water systems, the government said Thursday.

One of the chief causes includes inadequate regulation of private wells, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said.

"Many of these drinking-water outbreaks are preventable," said Sherline Lee of the CDC. "Whether from the tap or a bottle, the public should think about where their water comes from and whether it has been made safe."
