Many Web sites are run by people who want to create a personal presence on the Web. While some of these creators soon abandon their half-developed sites, others take great care to build Web sites that make visitors feel welcome and cause Web users to return time and time again, without really knowing why.

One such site is Paradox Discovered, where a woman in North Carolina houses her poetry, graphics, on-line quizzes and random musings. Topics covered on her site range from art to astrology and religion. The content of the site is similar to the content of thousands of other sites around the web, but Paradox Discovered stands out because of its clean and uncluttered layout. The site's few graphics are so artistically designed that they beckon visitors to stay awhile and look around.

The well-researched content on the site's various links will also impress visitors. Not only are visitors entertained, but they actually learn something as well. While the various topics discussed on the site might not be for everyone, it can't be denied that Paradox Discovered is an outstanding Web site.

While stress is virtually a part of everyday life, the question is how to handle it. StopStress.Com offers more than 100 Web sites offering help in managing stress. The links lead to information on cheap and easy ways to beat whatever is causing stress.

However, most of the links lead to e-commerce sites made to advertise an expensive product guaranteed to make users feel better. Some of these featured sites have nothing to do with stress relief at all.

StopStress.Com is not worth the time and effort it takes to get to the site, and potential visitors shouldn't bother. While the site advertises that it offers "free information about stress management," all it really accomplishes is offering a lot of useless links and a good dose of stress.

PEOPLE IN THE NEWS

Browne, songwriters settle royalties lawsuit

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Rock star Jackson Browne and two other songwriters settled a lawsuit that claimed they were underpaid for their contributions to one of the Eagles' most popular albums. Browne, Jack Tempchin and J.D. Souther sued Warner-Chappell Music Inc. in February for more than $10 million. An attorney for Brown and the others announced the settlement Friday but refused to discuss specifics. Warner-Chappell representatives did not immediately return calls for comment. According to the lawsuit, the songwriters were supposed to be paid a fluctuating royalty rate for their contributions to Eagles — Their Greatest Hits, 1971-1974. At the time of the suit, the rate was 7.5 cents per song. Instead, they have been paid only about 2.5 cents per song since 1975 for the hits "Already Gone," "Best of My Love," "Peaceful Easy Feeling," and "Take it Easy," according to the suit, which cites an audit performed in 2000.

NEW YORK (AP) — Broadway has its new "Frankie and Johnny," Rosie Perez and Joe Pantoliano will replace Edie Falco and Stanley Tucci on the Year's Day in the hit musical "Frankie and Johnny in the Chinatown," Terrence McNally's blue-collar romance. Perez is best known for her roles in White Men Can't Read and Fearless, and Pantoliano played the recently departed Ralph Cifaretto in HBO's "Sopranos," where Falco appeared as Carmela Soprano. "Frankie and Johnny" opened in August at the Belasco Theatre, is one of the season's successes. It already recouped its $13 million production costs. Falco and Tucci give their last performance Dec. 29.
