It is the on-going debate that has baffled linguistics and amused the masses for years. Is it "soda" or is it "pop?" Generally, it depends on where a person lives when it comes to defining the socially acceptable term for the bubbly drink most in Texas simply call "coke." Researchers at the California Institute of Technology and Lewis & Clark College have put together a Web site devoted to "The Great Pop vs. Soda Controversy." Their goal is to study which term is used in relation to regions of the United States. To accomplish this, the site asks visitors to give their hometown and what term they use to help build the interactive map showing the results.

Aside from the three main choices of "soda," "pop" and "coke" there is an "other" category. There, visitors can give a response that is more elaborate than the simplified choices available. Some of these responses are actually more interesting than the survey itself. If nothing else, the site is a great conversation starter and a legitimate test of what people say in each region. The conclusion researchers have reached ("People who say "Pop" are much, much cooler") is amusing and open to debate. The controversy has been going on for years, and this Web site certainly isn't going to bring it to an end. Nonetheless, it's a fun site with some interesting information available.

How healthy a person is refers not only to physical health but also to mental and spiritual health. Health.com covers all of these categories and more. Health.com is a comprehensive site of things dealing with health issues.

It has sections specifically for mind and body, beauty, food, fitness and relationships. It also site users a place to discuss all of these categories with other visitors.

Health.com is one location where information on almost anything health-related can be found. It is kept up-to-date on the latest discoveries. The site doesn't talk down to visitors, nor does it feature anything that would go over the average reader's head. The information available is complete, easy to understand and practical.

The site's only downfall is that some of the more interesting and helpful things require payment. For example, customized exercise and diet plans require paying a fee after a free 10-day trial. However, the majority of the site is free. In a time when "super-size" portions reign, Health.com is an invaluable tool. Be it mental, emotional or physically, Health.com is the place to turn.

J. Lo, Affleck receive custom-made game

NEW YORK (AP) — Mr. and Ms. Pac-Man, Super Mario and the princess, and ... Jennifer Lopez and Ben Affleck?

Director Kevin Smith is giving the newly engaged couple a custom-made video game to thank them for costarring in his recently wrapped movie "Jersey Girl," according to the New York Post.

LOPEZ

The game, "Jen Saves Ben," features an animated Lopez who must find and rescue Affleck, who has been kidnapped and chained to a warehouse wall.

"J. Lo has to get him back but doesn't know where he's gone," said Brad Graeber of Texas-based Powerhouse Animation Studios, the company that created the game.

As she karate-kicks her way through the game, Lopez must face an animated Smith, who totes a ray-gun, and an evil-robot Matt Damon.

She gets three tries to save her fiance without being killed, and if she succeeds the pair is shown kissing.

The game features a soundtrack of Lopez's music.

Bo Derek cancels fund-raising speech

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — An animal-rights group claims Bo Derek deserves less than a perfect "10" for canceling a speaking engagement at a fund-raising gala less than two weeks after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

Pennsylvania-based Mainline Rescue Inc. says it paid the actress a $15,000 advance appearance fee plus $6,402 for two first-class plane tickets for its Sept. 22, 2001, event in Malvern, Pa.

After repeated attempts to reschedule, the charity asked for the money back, but Derek balked, the group claims.

In a lawsuit filed in November, the group says Derek responded that she had already pledged the $15,000 fee to another charity.

"We did explain to her that we needed the money for food and to heat the kennels but it didn't make any difference to her," said William Smith, founder of Mainline Rescue, which places abused animals with new owners.

Derek, who sells a line of pet grooming products and resides in Santa Ynez, could not be reached Sunday through her talent agency or a message left with her sister. In May, she issued a statement saying the group declined her offer to return the money in hopes of scheduling another event.

Twain aims to sell 10 million in third album

PARIS (AP) — Shania Twain, possibly on her way to becoming the first female singer with three 10 million-selling albums, can afford to be a little contradictory.

"I never burned to perform, and I don't care if I ever perform again," Twain said in a Time magazine interview on newsstands Monday. "I have no need to do that."

A few hours after the October statement, the 37-year-old Canadian was singing her signature ballad, "You're Still the One," with an aspiring singer on "Star Academy," a French reality game show in which amateur singers share a house and vote each other out on the basis of their musical progress. Twain's newest album, "Up!" released Nov. 13, sold 874,000 copies in its first week, giving her a good start toward reaching eight albums for a third time.

Johnson to speak on living with AIDS

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Basketball Hall of Famer Earl "Magic" Johnson will speak about living with AIDS.

Johnson will speak Tuesday night at Drake University's Knapp Center. The school handed out 4,000 tickets.

"He is probably one of the most prominent individuals who are out there and are speaking on this topic," said Herschel Jackson, the university's director of student activities at Drake. Johnson helped the Los Angeles Lakers win five championships in his NBA career, which ended in 1991.
