MSC Film Society to host 10th annual Texas Film Festival this week

THE BATTALION

During its 125 years of existence, Texas A&M has become known for its many unique qualities including rich traditions, having one of the largest campuses in the nation, and maintaining a fierce sense of school spirit. One of Aggieland's newer achievements is that it is the host of the largest student-run film festival in the nation, the MSC Film Society's Annual Texas Film Festival. This week, the event will be celebrating its 10th year of successful operation.

Dan Steele, director of guest relations for the festival, said MSC Film Society members started the Texas Film Festival in response to "the very limited selection of quality movies at the local cinema."

"(Film Society members) were aware of the vast talent independent movies had, but they didn't know how to bring them into the spotlight," said Steele, a junior English major. "They decided that College Station needed an outlet for all of those unconventional and unique films out there."

Steele said the event started out as a minor idea, but has evolved during the years.

"(The Texas Film Festival) began as an artsy film festival," he said. "Over the years, it gradually gained momentum and as the participants and volunteers grew, we have become the biggest student-run movie event in the entire country."

Steele said the guest list for the festival features talent from across the nation.

"Every year we try to bring in directors and actors from all over the country," he said. "This year, we have invited 11 directors and several actors for the event, and many of them are from Hollywood."

Steele said he owes most of the Texas Film Festival's success to its 50-plus volunteers.

"The entire event is able to run smoothly because we have volunteers who really care about the festival," he said. "We have also become known for our hospitality which is why we can attract so many filmmakers, directors and actors to the event. All of the volunteers go out of their way and do a great job to make sure that everybody is comfortable and taken care of."

Steele said the ultimate purpose of the festival is to reveal the hidden talent lying in independent films.

"It is a completely volunteer and donation-run, non-profit event," he said. "The sole purpose of the festival is to create a showcase for all of the amazing yet lesser-known independent filmmakers out there to expose their talent. It is also an outlet for Aggies to experience different types of movies other than the regular Hollywood-type outfits."

Hallie Gardiner, co-chair for the Texas Film Festival, said the festival has a history of being a star-studded event.

"The first year that the event was put together, we actually had Spike Lee attend, and at the time he was promoting his movie 'Malcolm X,'" said Gardiner, a senior political science major. "Other famous directors that have attended are John Landis, who is the brain behind many of Michael Jackson's groundbreaking videos such as 'Thriller' and 'Black or White,' and Robert Rodriguez, who directed both of the 'Spy Kids' movies."

Gardiner said the movie selection process for this year's festival was a strenuous one.

"This year we had over 400 movie submissions, and all of the Film Society had to watch them and decide which ones would be included in the festival," she said. "After we decided on the movies, we sent out invitations to the producers and directors to come and join the festival."

Gardiner said Robbie Henson, who directed "The Badge" (which starred Patricia Arquette and Billy Bob Thornton), will appear at this year's festival.

In addition to the high-profile attendance, special recognition is awarded to many of the movies.

"There are several awards that are presented to the participants," Gardiner said. "The Judges Award, which is chosen by a board including faculty members and alumni, is given to the best short film, best narrative feature and best documentary. We also have the jury awards, director's choice, and audience choice awards."

Casey Pinkston, president of SWAMP Club (Screenwriters, Acting and Movie Production Club), has been a regular participant of the event for the past two years. This year, the organization has submitted three new entries in the Aggie Short Section of the festival, he said.

"(SWAMP) does a lot of short films, and we are always trying to improve them," said Pinkston, a senior environmental design major. "I think that our movies have progressed since last year, and the festival is a great way for us to display our improved efforts."

Last year, Pinkston and fellow SWAMP member Julian Londonio were the recipients of the special achievement award for their short film "The Eagle has Landed." Pinkston said he was surprised yet very pleased when he received the award.

"We were up against a lot of really great movies from professional and very talented filmmakers," he said. "On the judges' grading scale, we scored enough points to make the top five, so we received the award as a form of recognition for the movie."

For Pinkston, the Texas Film Festival is a break from Hollywood mainstream.

"I think that the festival is a great idea because it gives indie filmmakers a medium of coverage, and moviegoers a chance to see different types of movies," he said.

The Texas Film Festival will open Monday night with a showing of the Oscar-nominated documentary "Spellbound" in Rudder Auditorium at 7 p.m. All events will take place in Rudder Auditorium on Monday, Feb. 17, to Saturday, Feb. 22. Tickets for individual events can be purchased at the MSC box office for $3 each, and event passes can be purchased for $15. For more information, visit <http://txfilmfest.tamu.edu>.

February 26-27 The Department of Recreational Sports will be going to the A&M student body asking for a referendum to increase the Recreational Sports Fee from $78 to $88. This $10 increase per student, per semester is critical to the Department's ability to cover the cost of inflation in its budget. But more importantly, it will allow the Department to create some exciting opportunities for the students of Texas A&M: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Expand the Weight & Fitness Room Expand Penberthy Intramural Sports Center Increase Rec Sports student worker wages Hire a second Sport Club Coordinator (after hiring freeze is lifted) Referendum information is available at http://recsports.tamu.edu.
