Us Weekly editor signs three-year contract

NEW YORK (AP) — Bonnie Fuller, who was brought in a year ago as editor of Us Weekly to help revive the glossy celebrity magazine, has signed a new three-year contract.

Terms of the deal weren't disclosed but a source familiar with the contract, speaking to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity, said Fuller would get about $1 million a year.

Fuller and Us Weekly owner Jann Wenner, who also owns Rolling Stone magazine, reached the deal Friday, spokesman Stuart Zakim said Tuesday.

A year ago, Us Weekly's circulation lagged behind arch rival People magazine, despite Wenner investing millions in the magazine to bring it to a weekly from a monthly format.

At that time, Us had a total circulation of 929,000 versus People's 3.7 million, according to the Audit Bureau of Circulations.

As of the end of June 2002, Us Weekly's circulation increased to 1.1 million, whereas People's declined slightly but still leads by a wide margin at 3.6 million, the industry tracking firm said.

The number of advertising pages increased 8 percent overall for the year under Fuller's tenure, according to officials at Us Weekly.
