that doesn't go along with us will be paying a very heavy price," said one Mexican diplomat, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

To get its resolution through, the United States must secure nine votes in the 15 member council while preventing France, Russia or China — which are pushing for continued weapons inspections — from using their vetoes. The United States and Britain hold the two other vetoes.

On Saturday, Bush brushed aside doubts about whether the resolution could overcome the deep divisions within the council, telling reporters "we are just beginning" to line up allies.

Undersecretary of State John Bolton will go to Moscow this week for talks designed to persuade Russian officials to support the U.S.-British resolution.

While Washington and London believe they already have the necessary authorization to forcefully disarm Iraq, many key allies — Turkey included — have said a new resolution would help them overcome opposition at home. The backing of the council also would lend international legitimacy to a war and mean that Washington could count on the United Nations to share in the costs of rebuilding Iraq.

saying an attack would be seen throughout the Islamic world as "a war against Muslims," especially since Washington has been significantly less hawkish in handling North Korea's nuclear program.

"The attack against Iraq will simply anger more Muslims who see this as anti-Muslim rather than anti-terror," the Malaysian leader told a forum of business leaders coinciding with the summit.

"The fact that North Korea's open admission that it has weapons of mass destruction has met only with mild admonishment by the West seems to prove that indeed it is a war against Muslims and not against the fear of possession of weapons of mass destruction by the so-called rogue countries," Mahathir said.

Mahathir also accused Israel of seizing upon fears of terrorism following the Sept. 11 attacks.
