Pick-a-Prof on its Web site (sga.tamu.edu), which allows students to view the breakdown of grades in any given course by professors from as far back as 1985, Landgraf said.

This service is free of charge, but lacks student reviews.

"When I register for classes I first check the grade distribution from the SGA Web site, then I check the student reviews from Pick-A-Prof," said Anna Hollier, a sophomore finance major.

According to feedback from panels of students in focus groups, the student reviews posted on Pick-A-Prof are what keep users coming back to the site, Bragg said.

Pick-A-Prof also offers a new service called Professor Support System, which allows professors to post their syllabi and biographical information on the site prior to registration. Professors can use this feature to make their own course evaluations.

Associate professor of English Paula Matthews said while the information should be available to students, she would have mixed feelings about participating in the Professor Support System.

"Why don't we just have this for the University instead of on a commercial site," Matthews said.

Matthews said she supports full disclosure of information to students, admitting that she looked herself up on the Pick-A-Prof Web site when it first began. But she said the site would work best if every person in a class wrote a review.

The Pick-A-Prof service began as a pilot program A&M and the University of Texas at Austin, and is now utilized on more than 50 campuses nationwide.

Crowds gather to support Bush

HOUSTON (AP) — Crowds gathered in two Texas cities Saturday to support President George W. Bush's stand against Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein.

A crowd of more than 7,000 gathered in Selma, while an audience of between 8,000 and 10,000 cheered and waved flags while listening to speakers at a downtown Houston plaza, according to organizers, who work for radio stations owned by Clear Channel Communications Inc.

Meanwhile, thousands jammed into a downtown Houston plaza in support of Bush.
