Spring practice update

By Troy Miller
THE BATTALION

Spring drills for the Texas A&M football team are at the halfway mark and the new regime led by Head Coach Dennis Franchione released its first depth chart after Tuesday's practice session.

In the spirit of the 12th Man, Franchione has every player participating in spring drills on the chart. Depth charts are traditionally only two players deep at each position.

"I don't put a lot of weight in this (depth chart)," Franchione said. "We have to be able to start to work as units and these are the guys who deserve to be in these positions at this point in time, but it's only after eight practices and we still have 30 something more to go."

A few changes were made in positions as redshirt freshman Chad Schroeder has been moved from wide receiver to quarterback. Redshirt freshman Andy Matakis has been moved from linebacker to tight end and junior Jason Carter has been moved from quarterback to the A-back position.

"A is a multi-purpose position," Franchione said. "It's a tailback, wide receiver, slot receiver, and (Carter) can play in three of four different locations in our offense. It's a move we did not force on him. We just felt like that we needed to have him involved in our 22 best football players."

Schroeder moves to quarterback where he was a standout at Austin Westlake High School and led Westlake to the Texas State Championship in 2001. The move for Schroeder will most likely be temporary. "He had pulled a hamstring and has not practiced much," Franchione said. "So this gives him a way to reduce the risk of reinjury and gives us a contingency plan for quarterback depth."

The Aggies are also getting used to the new 4-3 formation on defense as opposed to the 3-4 run under R.C. Slocum. In the new defensive formation the Aggies will have four down linemen and three linebackers as opposed to three down linemen and four linebackers.

The largest change for the defensive linemen is learning to play defensive end, which is not utilized in a 3-4 defense.

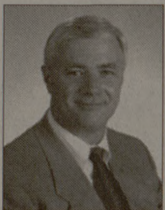

"We want to try to find that speed rusher on the end on passing situations," Franchione said.

Tuesday's practice also saw the first time the Aggie offense went through two-minute drills. The offense would start from the opponent's 20-yard line and work its way downfield in a live game situation.

"The thing that you gain that is so valuable out of that is communication under pressure," Franchione said. "I was very encouraged by what I saw."

The next spring practice for the Aggies will be Wednesday from 3:30-6:30 on the practice fields adjacent to Kyle Field. Practices are open to the public to watch.

Spring drills will culminate on Saturday, April 12 when the Aggies will scrimmage in the annual Maroon & White Game at 2 p.m.
