"The demonstrations and peace flags are a way for the people to say to the government, 'No, we are not for this war,'" Capacci said.

It is common for students abroad to become engaged in political conversations with locals.

Italians and citizens of other European countries are curious about Americans' thoughts on the war and often approach students to inquire about their opinions.

Junior architecture major Jenna Dee Miller said that when Europeans find out she is from Texas, they assume she knows what is going on in the United States.

"Public opinion in Europe is that America is wrong. I'm not sure it is, but I'm not sure it isn't either," she said. "It's really strange to be so removed from what's going on."

Matthew Petrie, a senior biomedical sciences major, said Americans abroad are often associated with decisions and actions of the U.S. government.

"It embarrasses me when the government wastes its time renaming french fries," he said. "I think their time could be better spent."

Still, most students said being abroad during the war has opened their eyes to a more worldly perspective.

"I like being out of the conservative atmosphere of A&M," said sophomore political science major Carin Compton. "We get to see things through different eyes."

Kansas State University senior landscape architecture major Deon Glaser said she appreciates experiencing views from another part of the world.

"When you're in America, you only hear about how current events affect America," she said.

In a setting where news is spread in a foreign language, students rely on limited English newspapers and CNN World from a single television set to find out what is going on around the world.

"It's hard in this setting to be totally informed on everything," Compton said.

Despite unrest in Italy and throughout Europe, students said they do not feel that they are in any immediate danger, although they are often easily identified as Americans.

"The sentiment here is much more anti-war and anti-Bush than anti-American," said junior architecture major Morgan Rhea Nixon.

Chase Clay, a junior architecture major, said he tries to be cautious while traveling, but isn't worried about his safety.

"I can feel people watching me sometimes," he said, "but that's the extent of my discomfort."

Although most students at Santa Chiara say they share the sentiment of feeling safe, it doesn't stop them from trying to keep attention away from the fact that they are Americans.

When approached by a group of men in the subway in London, Katie Hogan said she felt admitting her nationality would be a little risky.

"I told them I was Canadian,"

The seven walked — some ran — into a transport plane that flew them to Kuwait for checkups, treatment for those who needed it, and briefings. The prisoners gave an account of their capture and captivity to reporters from The Washington Post and The Miami Herald who were on the flight.

The sight of their loved ones, bedraggled in their pajama-like POW garb, electrified families and communities back home.

"It's him, and I'm just so happy that I could kiss the world!" Ron Young Sr. of Lithia Springs, Ga., said after spotting son Ronald D. Young Jr., 26, a helicopter pilot, in choppy video of the free POWs.

The prisoners, held in a Baghdad prison for about the first two weeks, told of being beaten when captured and interrogated while bedraggled, but said their treatment improved somewhat as time went on. As U.S. troops closed in on Baghdad, they said they were moved over and over to keep ahead of advancing Americans.

"We could feel the whole thing collapse," said Chief Warrant Officer Young, one of the helicopter crewmen among the prisoners.

A&M among top 25 schools for Hispanic

Hispanic Magazine ranked Texas A&M No. 21 among its 25 colleges and universities Hispanics in its annual rankings issue.

Other Texas schools on the list include Rice University No. 2; the University of Texas No. 6; Southern Methodist University at No. 24 and The University at No. 25.

The magazine said the top colleges "offer students a complete package: superior academics, a Hispanic presence and an all-around exceptional experience."

A&M is for students who crave passionate college tradition, school pride and camaraderie," according to Hispanic Magazine. Benefits include academics, environment and vast alumni network, as well as student merit scholarships.

Kerlees named A&M parents of the year

Timothy and Janice Kerlees were honored as Texas A&M "Parents of the Year" for 2003-2004 school year Sunday.

The couple moved to College Station from Barlett, Tenn., their 17-year-old son Tim died from injuries sustained the 1999 Aggie Bonfire lapse.

The couple opened their home to several A&M students in hopes of assisting students in the transition from their hometowns to College Station said the Parents' Weekend Committee.

"Moving to College Station and working with students has been the greatest blessing of our lives," Janice Kerlees said. "The love that we would give our son, we now give to hundreds of others, and consequently, that love is recognized many times over. We are honored and humbled by the award."

The Kerlees organize a bi-annual barn dance, an annual cookout, and in November 2001, they pioneered a "wild God" study to help students cope with the Bonfire tragedy. They also cook "welcome meals for students each year and host "fish Fridays" in the home for freshmen in the Corps of Cadets.
