Neild said building to suit ethnic group was the same, dealing with any client.

"One thing that was stressful was to be very attentive to what your client has to say and try to meet that need," Neild said. "In this project, we were building for a faith group."

Gabriel Guzman, a senior environmental design major, said designing to combat harsh New England winters presented unfamiliar challenges.

"We're not familiar with (winter weather)," she said. "I'm from San Antonio and (there) it's always humid and hot."

Guzman said student's solutions for dealing with winter weather included covered walkways to protect against snow, a winter garden to allow for outdoor activities to combat boredom during the long winter months.

Each of the nine proposals, accompanied by a detailed model, built entirely by hand. Inman's his model took 50 hours over a span of two weeks.

involved students in the decision-making process, he said.

Cheatham disagrees with Coventry's evaluation of his presidency.

"This has been another year where students didn't feel they were accurately represented, and I hope Matt (Josefy) changes that," he said.

As rain forced State of the University Address listeners to gather under the rotunda of the Academic Building, Coventry introduced new student body president Matt Josefy.

Josefy, a junior accounting major, said Coventry has been his friend and mentor who helped transition him into his term as SBP.

"I am not starting a new race," Josefy said. "I am picking up the baton from Zac and continuing."

While Coventry reflects on his term and Josefy prepares for the beginning of his year in office, other student leaders are also planning for the challenges of the upcoming year.

"I am not concerned with the past or with Zac's administration," said freshman marketing major Kerri Ward, organizer of the 28-member senate bloc that ran in support of Cheatham for student body president. "I am concerned with Matt's administration and our efforts as we work together."

program and a promotions area, and will improve the SGA Web site.

Herreth said he plans to build a strong foundation for the Office of Communications and hopes students are well informed on important matters such as tuition deregulation.

"(With) anything new you want a strong foundation," Herreth said.

Josefy said communications is key in his platform while running.

Josefy said he chose Herreth because his strong interview and his ties with the Residence Hall Association showed Josefy that Herreth had good communication skills.

Josefy said Derr, a sophomore biology major, was chosen to head operations because of her leadership experience in Texas Aggies Making Change and her involvement with SGA committees this year.

"I saw need for more unity and accountability among committees," Derr said. "I want to make all programs cohesive."

The position of EVP operations oversees finance, development, management and diversity.

Derr said her plan for dealing with diversity is to continue the work of current executive Pablo Rodriguez to make "SGA lead the diversity initiative."

Derr pointed to the many SGA-sponsored diversity events, such as the diversity symposium, saying that SGA is a leader on the controversial campus issue.

As EVP for policy, Megan Stephenson will oversee academic affairs, legislative relations, student services and the new experiential education.

Experiential education is applying classroom solutions to campus problems and expanding on-campus internships, said Stephenson, currently associate vice president for Legislative Relations.

"An example would be if we needed design of a green space, on one of the many quads around campus, we could let architecture students submit proposals," Stephenson said. "It ties real-life things into education."

Julie Holzer was also announced as Josefy's assistant, a position which needs no approval in the senate.

Iraq

Money from international oil sales is expected to be the major source of income to help Iraq rebuild after three wars and more than a decade of economic sanctions. Crear said it was unclear when exports might resume.

Any loss of oil from Iraq — home to the world's second-largest oil reserves — crimps supplies for importing countries, including the United States, which gets 2 percent of its imported crude from Iraq.

Iraq shut down oil production in mid-March ahead of the war. Before that, the country was pumping around 2.8 million barrels a day, or 3 percent of global supplies.
