By I. Flores

Sokolov

fun time for him. "I think I came to Stanford very well prepared," he said. "The core physics classes were rather easy for me, so I had more free time."

Sokolov said he enjoys sports of all types. In California, he enjoyed wind surfing and tennis and boxed for many years in Russia. He also took classes in fencing, art, drawing, modern sculpture and piano classes.

Sokolov said most of his family still lives in Ukraine, but he resides in College Station with his wife Tonya, whom he married last fall.

Now 32, Sokolov said he hopes to continue finding possibilities to study new physics. He continues to research optics at A&M with students and co-workers.

"I am fortunate to be working with him," said graduate and co-worker Andrea Burzo. "Dr. Sokolov is very helpful in everything that we do. He is constantly next to us, giving us advice. It's a really nice teacher-student relationship."

In the past, Sokolov has taught 200-level undergraduate physics classes, but he will begin teaching senior-level labs next fall.

Sokolov said not only is the United States the best place to study physics right now, but that A&M is as well. The physics department is improving and expanding, which allows researchers to achieve a combined expertise and advance research programs, he said.

"I like it a lot here, and I am very happy I came to this country," he said. "I knew I would have a much better chance of doing good science and being able to concentrate on physics instead of just concentrating on surviving."
