SO RUSS, ARE WE GONNA GET PAID FOR THIS FRAT PARTY CONCERT?

WELL, THEY SAID WE COULD KEEP ALL THE MONEY WE GET FROM RECYCLING ALL OF THE EMPTY BEER BOTTLES.

SWEET! WE'RE GONNA CLEAN UP!

YOU KNOW IT. I'M BUYING ROLLERBLADES.

Crazy Jake

You know, I'm thinking about growing a goatee.

Hmm. I had a beard once. I wouldn't recommend it.

Why not?

Let's just say that facial hair and Silly-Putty don't mix.

Why do I even ask?

SO YOU'RE JOINING A SERVICE FRAT?

BASICALLY, THE FRAT I AM INTERESTED IN STOCKS, SERVICES, AND DELIVERS UN-SEVERABLES TO MANY ESTABLISHMENTS AND SOCIAL GROUPS.

YEAH, ALWAYS WANTED TO JOIN A FRAT BUT I ALSO WANTED TO GIVE BACK TO THE PEOPLE.

SO YOU'RE PAYING MONEY TO HELP PEOPLE? AND BY HELP PEOPLE I MEAN WORK FOR ALCOHOL DISTRIBUTORS.

THOSE KEES DON'T GET TO SORORITY PARTIES BY THEMSELVES, BRIAN.

where storm surge picked up a washer, dryer and refrigerator and carried them about 500 feet down the street.

In York County, Va., sheriff's deputies rescued a family of seven trapped on a street when trees fell and blocked the path to their car, county spokesman Greg Davy said. The family had driven to the York River and gotten out of their car to "experience the excitement," Davy said.

At 9 p.m., Isabel was about 30 miles northwest of Emporia, Va., moving northwest at around 20 mph, up from 14 mph Wednesday evening when it approached the coast.

The increase in speed is not unusual, and could mean lighter rain and less flooding, said Chris Sisko, a meteorologist at the hurricane center.

The hurricane couldn't keep football fans away from Virginia Tech's Lane Stadium, where the Hokies were playing Texas A&M.

The 65,115-seat stadium was sold out, even with rain that soaked through parkas and wind that bent back umbrellas. Gusts of up to 50 mph were expected for the game in Blacksburg.

"My wife's been calling me on the cell phone all day. ... The power's been off," said Hokies fan Lee Wagstaff, whose wife and dairy farm were deep in Isabel's path in Clarksville, about 100 miles away on the North Carolina border.

Why wasn't Wagstaff at home? "Hey, it's a Tech ball game, man!"

Isabel was expected to move north across Virginia and cut through western Pennsylvania and western New York state before dissipating in Canada by Saturday.

Up to a foot of rain was possible in West Virginia's hilly Eastern Panhandle and 6 to 9 inches was forecast for parts of Pennsylvania.

President Bush declared major disasters in North Carolina and Virginia, ordering federal aid to both states. The governors of Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Maryland, New Jersey and Delaware declared state emergencies.

Well over 1,500 flights were canceled at airports in the major Eastern cities, said David Stempler, president of the Air Travelers Association. As the storm moved north, all flights to and from the Washington metropolitan area's airports were likely to be canceled, he said.

The federal government shut down in Washington. Amtrak halted service south of Washington, and the Washington-area Metro system shut down all subway and bus service.

Miss America pageant organizers went ahead with plans for their annual parade Friday night in Atlantic City, N.J., hoping the boardwalk would escape damage.

For many, the hurricane's passing was merely a sightseeing event.

"For me, this is just like another little rainstorm, but you take what you can get," storm chaser Warren Faidley said as he videotaped the frothy, 15-foot swells on Atlantic Beach, N.C.

He was impressed that in the middle of the hurricane, he was able to get a hot sausage biscuit at a pier right on the beach.

"Hot food during the hurricane," he said, chewing away. "This is the most gentlemanly chase of all times."

affect Herbst's plans, it did keep some Aggies from tailgating prior to the game.

"We had planned on tailgating with a Hokie friend of ours," said Bryan Bell, Class of 2001. "We had to call them and give them a good chewin' out."

Kyle Valentine, founder of Maroon Out and Class of 2000, said the weather just added to the fun of the trip.

"More than anything it makes for a great story,"

Valentine said. "Everyone goes to away football games, but being able to say you were at the game with the hurricane will make a great story 15 to 20 years from now."

Most of those on hand said they were trying to make the best of the situation.

"It is what it is," Valentine said. "There's not a whole lot you can do about it. We're trying to have a good time and make the best of it. We anticipate being miserable but we'll have a great time. We're prepared to deal with it."

Mallahan said it was tested year on a Corps outfit who GPR was ranked second from the bottom. This outfit is ranked third overall in the Corps.

Another resource the Corps have to improve their grades, the 27 faculty and staff who serve as Academic Volunteers for the Corps. Mallahan said these volunteers meet with freshmen once a week to check on their progress. Six of these volunteers were recognized last semester with $1,000 for their outstanding service to the program.

This semester, freshmen are not allowed to participate in University organizations until they prove they can handle the studies, Mallahan said.

"This is a regimented lifestyle that requires you manage your time very early in your career," Mallahan said.

"The Corps teaches time management, and I think I will make better grades because of it," said Cory Henry, freshman cadet and electrical engineering major.

Another issue being addressed to keep the Corps average high is the problem of cadets sleeping in class. Les Miller, a junior chemistry and microbiology major and the Corps Scholastics Sergeant, said the Corps has had problems with cadets falling asleep in class, and faculty members resulting frustration.

"The Corps of Cadets highly encourages professors to wake cadets up in class," Miller said.

Curtis Weddle, a senior biomedical engineering major, is member of the O.R. Simpson Corps Honor Society, an organization within the Corps which recognizes cadets who have outstanding GPRs.

"Although the Corps activities are a lot of work, it makes so that when you do have time to study, you work harder," Weddle said.

Programs such as the honor society are an extra incentive for cadets to make good grades.

"The Corps of Cadets is really clamping down this year and stressing doing well," Mallahan said. "It is school first and Corps second."

it easier to locate the bikes and it's the only way we can prove ownership."

Baron said students on campus can get their bikes engraved through their residence halls. Baron said students need to lock their bikes properly by locking the frames of their bikes and not just the wheels.

"I bought a $40 bike lock. Forssman said. "I've been real careful with my bike. I keep seeing bikes around campus that aren't even locked."

One of those bikes belongs to Brandon Brickley, who owns pink and purple bike meant for young girls. Brickley, a freshman business administration major, said he bought the $40 bike because he knew no one else would have one similar. He said he could leave it unlocked with out having to worry about being stolen.

"It's faster to ride because you don't have to lock it," Brickley said. "You can park closer and just jump off and go to class."
