Anderson said he will work closely with Dean of Faculty Karan Watson in the hiring of 40 new faculty members over the next four years to ensure that the group is as diverse as possible. Fund-raising efforts and grant proposals will also be a large part of the office's responsibilities.

The national image the A&M portrays is important, Anderson said, and currently the University is not doing enough to publicize its achievements. "When people talk about diversity, they only talk about it as a way to confirm their own political beliefs," Anderson said. "People should instead think about it in terms of what it can do for people and not how they feel about it personally."

The reaction of student leaders to the administration has been largely positive. African American Student Coalition President Cedric Bates said the University's hiring of Anderson is a step in the right direction. "I think it's excellent. A&M has been talking about diversity for a long time," Bates said. "I'm looking forward to working with Dr. Anderson."

Julio Jana, International Student Association president, was a member of the selection committee that chose Anderson. "The University is really doing something to achieve diversity and (Dr. Anderson) will turn talk into action," Jana said. "It's up to us, the student body, to help him achieve this."

"There are a lot of people out there trying to scam people out of their money," said Sergeant Jeff Kapps of the College Station Police Department. "Students can make easy victims, too. It's hard to keep yourself from being a victim of a scam."

Kapps urges others to be wary of people selling things out of their car or on the street, and said if it sounds too good to be true, it usually is.

"If you go to a reputable dealer, you have a place to go back to," said Sergeant Jackie Maynard of the Bryan Police Department. "The problem is that you can't find these traveling salesmen."

Maynard said that when confronted with people selling products on the street, the consumer should take some time to research the product. He said a good strategy is to call the vendor back the next day or to call the Better Business Bureau first.

All vendors have to have a city permit to sell their merchandise, Maynard said. He urged people to call the police if vendors cannot produce either a solicitor's or vendor's permit, and not to buy the products if they cannot.

"We just want to catch the people so they can't do it again," Gann said.

swiftly to approve the map Friday. But in another strange twist, the Senate held off its vote to wait for the House to approve an unrelated bill to reorganize some parts of state government.

By the time the government reorganization bill was eligible in the House on Friday, there were not enough representatives left at the Capitol to take up the bill and the House adjourned. The Senate delayed its vote on redistricting.

The House approved the government reorganization bill by a 79-35 vote Sunday before adjourning.

Lt. Gov. David Dewhurst previously said the Senate would not approve the map until the House passed the unrelated bill. "I'm personally ready to call their bluff in the Senate," said Rep. Terry Keel, R-Austin, arguing against the government reorganization bill.

Rep. John Mabry, D-Waco, tried to thwart the government reorganization bill, raising a legislative objection that the conference committee did not convene in public and no record was kept of the proceedings.

House Speaker Tom Craddick overruled the objection. Other lawmakers argued that they were assured the bill adopted last month by the House would stay intact. However, dozens of amendments were added by the Senate and adopted by the conference committee.

"I do not want to be held hostage by the Senate," Carter Casteel, R-New Braunfels, one of the original authors of the bill. "I am sad that I'm standing here today asking you to vote against a bill that I helped author."

Debate on the bill was cut off after about 20 minutes, angering lawmakers who still had questions about some of the measures in the bill.

"I haven't gotten the answers to my questions because there's been no testimony, but we're fixing to make it happen so we better be right," said Rep. Craig Eiland, D-Galveston.

One of the provisions adopted by the conference committee would leave it up to individual school boards to decide whether they want to disclose their personal finances.

The conference committee adopted Senate changes that would strip Comptroller Carole Keeton Strayhorn of her performance review and school district audit programs, transferring the duties to the Legislative Budget Board.
