Crew defense. Kendrick's parents said they are not surprised by what their son has achieved.

"He has more perseverance than any 21-year-old I've ever known," Ann Kendrick said. "When he makes up his mind to do something, it's a done deal. He's always been that way."

Kendrick has one more year of football eligibility, after which he plans to attend graduate school at A&M. He said he believes his time as a walk-on will help him with any future challenges he might face.

"I just really hope to learn from being here," Kendrick said. "I've made some great friendships, and it's all worth it now. Feeling like I'm a part of this, it's worth it to me."

training camp, along with Tony Delk, in a deal for Raef LaFrentz, a finesse, foul-prone center who did little to solve the problems in the middle.

Losing Van Exel cost Dallas an instant-offense Sixth Man who made the Mavs tougher to defend when playing alongside Nash. He also brought an emotional toughness the team lacked.

But the Mavs believe Jamison will provide the same scoring spark off the bench, and maybe more. Walker, who will be the "point forward" long coveted by coach Don Nelson, will be the second skilled ball-handler to complement Nash, and his size makes defending them even tougher. Fortson could emerge as the new tough guy.

"This is Dirk, Steve and Mike's team. We're just pieces to the puzzle and we're going to do whatever it takes to get this team to the next level," Jamison said. "I don't think it's going to be a problem as far as guys' egos or about how many touches we get. It's all about getting Ws."

That's certainly the right thing to do before the opener, which comes Tuesday night in Los Angeles against the Lakers.

How long that spread-the-wealth attitude prevails is the biggest question for the Mavs.

Team officials, though, have many reasons why they believe this conglomerate will work.

— After scoring 103 points per game the regular season, Dallas upped it in playoffs, mostly because Van Exel was more alongside the Big Three. Walker and Jamison certainly will keep that trend going.
