U.S. names guerrilla groups

By John J. Lumpkin
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — U.S. intelligence agencies have identified several guerrilla groups, including one whose name calls for Saddam Hussein's return, that they now believe are behind much of the anti-U.S. violence in Iraq.

The top general in the region, Gen. John Abizaid, estimated Thursday that insurgent fighters in Iraq total no more than 5,000, and he said the largest and most dangerous groups are Saddam loyalists.

"I would say that this group of Baathists (Saddam loyalists), by far, represents the greatest threat to peace and stability," the general said.

Abizaid, the chief of U.S. Central Command, did not provide details, but said the insurgent forces have considerable training and supplies, plus money from stashes left over from Saddam's rule and from sources outside Iraq.

The most significant, The Return Party, is composed primarily of members of Saddam's Baath Party, the officials said. Another, Muhammad's Army, appears to be run by former chiefs of Saddam's security services.

Other threats include Sunni Islamic extremists, some from outside the country, and Shiite extremists who may be receiving support from others in Iran.

Much remains murky about these opposition forces, the officials acknowledged. And most of the major bombings and attacks against U.S. and other Western targets remain unsolved.

But defense and other American officials familiar with Iraqi intelligence say they are making some headway in characterizing the guerrillas.

The groups are using classic guerrilla tactics: bombings, snipings and hit-and-run attacks, and some are using suicide bombers, officials said. While the groups have varying degrees of organization and capability, their emergence in the months since Saddam was ousted suggests the U.S. could be facing a sustained insurgency from several fronts.

Chief among the identified guerrilla groups are: —The Return Party: Considered the most significant insurgent group in Iraq, although officials could not put a figure to its size. It is composed primarily of members of Saddam's Baath Party and maintains the party's prewar structure, with regional and local organizations.

—Muhammad's Army: This group, also seeking to return Saddam to power, consists of at least several hundred former members of Iraq's intelligence and security services.

Iraq's guerrilla groups identified

U.S. intelligence agencies have identified several guerrilla groups in Iraq that officials believe are behind much of the anti-U.S. violence there.

SOURCE: Associated Press

—Saddam's Fedayeen: Elements of the Fedayeen, one of Saddam's prewar irregular militias, continue to operate separately from other insurgents, U.S. officials say.

U.S. officials also have identified several groups they label as extremist:

—Muntada al-Wilaya: A Shiite extremist group operating in Baghdad and southern Iraq. It wants to eject American forces and set up an Islamic state like Iran's. American officials have suspicions that this group is linked to the Qods Force, an Iranian special forces unit that reports to the religious government in Tehran, and to Lebanese Hezbollah.

—Ansar al-Islam: A Sunni group, composed primarily of ethnic Kurds from Iraq's north, that U.S. officials say has ties to the al-Qaida terror network. Members may be acting as local fixers for foreign al-Qaida members entering Iraq.

—Abu Musab Zarqawi: A man, not a group, with al-Qaida ties. This Jordanian is thought to be working with Ansar al-Islam but also leads his own network in Iraq.

Various U.S. officials have also spoken generally of "foreign fighters" as a threat. While some may be operating under al-Qaida's umbrella, many are thought to be lone actors or small groups inspired to wage jihad, or religiously motivated war, against U.S. forces.

Researcher shocked by transport of vials

By Betsy Blaney
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LUBBOCK, Texas — A plague researcher for the Army testified Thursday that she was surprised when she learned that a Texas Tech University professor personally transported samples of potentially deadly bacteria from Africa.

Thomas Butler, 62, is on trial on multiple felony counts stemming from his report of stolen bacteria responsible for bubonic plague, including charges of illegally transporting the vials.

Patricia Worsham, who works in the plague division at the U.S. Army Medical Research Institute of Infectious Diseases at Fort Detrick in Maryland, said she discussed possibly obtaining samples from Butler. But she said she had no idea he had personally brought them on a plane from Tanzania.

"I would have run screaming from the room," said Worsham, who said she had exchanged e-mails with Butler about the samples. "That is a type of violation of the law that I would not want to become involved with, that my institute would not want to become involved with."

Butler faces 69 felony charges in connection with his Jan. 14 report that 30 vials were stolen from the university lab, an incident that sparked a bioterrorism scare in this West Texas town. The renowned plague researcher later admitted to accidentally destroying the vials.

Butler's defense team has portrayed him as a dedicated researcher who was doing plague research for the government — the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the U.S. Army and the Food and Drug Administration.

On cross examination, defense attorney Floyd Holder asked Worsham about an e-mail that he said showed Butler wanted advice on how to transport plague samples to the institute. He asked whether she advised him or dodged his question.

"I wouldn't have intentionally dodged the question and I wouldn't necessarily say this was asking for advice," Worsham said.

Worsham said she trusted Butler's knowledge and experience in safeguarding plague samples being transported. In other testimony Thursday, a CDC official said he spoke to Butler the day the vials were reported missing and characterized their conversation as "odd."

Kenneth Gage, a plague surveillance and control officer at the CDC's Fort Collins, Colo., office, said he spoke to Butler to establish how dangerous the vials were.

Butler had taken the samples to the Colorado facility in June 2002 for diagnostic testing. In their conversation, Gage testified, Butler seemed more concerned about test results that showed not all of the vials tested positive for plague than the fact they were missing.

Within hours of the report of missing vials, scores of federal agents descended on the city and a frantic search for the vials ensued. It ended when Butler gave FBI agents a written statement in which he acknowledged a "misjudgment" in not telling his supervisor that the vials had been "accidentally destroyed," according to testimony.

Prosecutors allege that Butler reported the vials as missing in retaliation for and to deflect attention from difficulties with the university's Institutional Review Board.

SPORTS IN BRIEF

A&M football player suspended indefinitely

COLLEGE STATION, Texas — Texas A&M Director of Athletics Byrre announced today that Pittman, a freshman football player from Odessa, Texas, has been suspended indefinitely due to a violation of department and university conduct, rules and regulations.

Pittman, a defensive line player is a true freshman who played at Permian High School in Odessa last fall. He has not played in a game since fall and was being redshirted.

Cross country teams go to championships

When the Arkansas Razorbacks left the Southwest Conference in 1991, it came as a relief to other men's cross country teams at the conference.

The Razorbacks dominated the conference, winning the last 10 titles before switching to the Southeastern Conference. Switching leagues, however, hasn't kept Texas A&M and other former Southwest Conference schools away from Arkansas. While the Aggies and Razorbacks no longer compete in the same conference, geography still links the two schools.

The Aggies will compete against Arkansas this Saturday at the NCAA South Central Region Championships, which will be held at the Texas Farm Bureau Center in Waco.

The top two teams from the men's and women's race will earn automatic bids to the NCAA Championships. The top four individuals not on the top two finishing teams will earn individual bids.

While the A&M women need an automatic bid if they wish to make it to the NCAA Championships, the men, because of their early season success, are in a more comfortable position. Even if they don't place in the top two, they will have a good chance of receiving an at-large bid.

Coach Dave Hartman feels good about Saturday's race.

"I think our guys are ready to try their best race of the year," said coach Hartman. "We just have to run smarter than we did in the 12 Championships. We've emphasized strategy a lot this week."

The men's 10,000-meter race will begin at 10 a.m. on Saturday and the women's 8,000-meter race starts at 11:15 a.m.

forward, pitting them against one another as usual.

"I've played against (Harvey) since I was 10 years old," Burke said. "She was on the rival club team of mine. We were always marking each other then. Now she's more of a forward and I'm more of a defender, so we go head to head."

Whether it's Burke versus Harvey or team versus team, the Mustangs to see who goes and who goes home, looks like another classic in the making.

Then again, they always do. "Both teams now have been scouted by each other's coaches," said A&M senior midfielder Kristen Strutz. "With the postseason I think changes are sometimes out and you need to know what the other team is going to throw at you. It's do or die."
