Today, I went to class and found out that I have a test in two days.
I haven't studied at all for this test! I'll be cramming for the next 48 hours!
Has that ever happened to you, Jake?
You know what words sound weird? "Paper Daily."
Do you ever pay attention?
Sorry, I'm broke. Can't afford it.

same amount of excitement about the plan as Rother's is, such as Angela Nelson, a sophomore marketing major.

"I think it is cool that they want to support the University in that way, but it seems like they are spending a lot of money changing it when they already had built a good name for themselves," she said.

Kirk Garza, a junior economics major, said he does not see the point in the store's remodeling.

"I really think all this money could be used for something besides decorations," he said. "Students already like Rother's and are going to buy books from them despite what the store looks like."

This is a project Rother's has been working on for more than two years.

"People need to come in and see nothing has really changed," Brooks said. "There will be more confusion than anything at first."

Steps are being taken to spark student interest in their new stores, she said. There will be given away to promote the new stores and giveaways have been planned.

"All this work and change is worth when you consider all of the overall benefits Brooks said.
