Kerry

doubts about his viability. He did manage about twice as many votes as either Edwards or Clark.

Dean kept his emotions in check Tuesday night, telling supporters, "The people of New Hampshire have allowed all of you to hope again."

Edwards, who finished a surprise second in Iowa, failed to find the same magic in New Hampshire, though he did gain some support in a week. He's staking his candidacy on his native South Carolina, a centerpiece of next week's contests.

"Beyond South Carolina, I don't want to make any predictions," he said.

Clark, hoping to be the rare candidate who thrives after a distant finish, said, "We came into New Hampshire as one of the Elite Eight. We leave tonight as one of the Final Four," he said.

Ignoring his fifth-place showing, Lieberman declared, "We're in a three-way split decision" and pointed his ragged campaign toward South Carolina, Delaware and Oklahoma.

Kerry's victory ensures him money and momentum headed into next Tuesday's contests.

Dean insisted he will "play to win in every single state," overruling aides who urged a more cautious approach. The former Vermont governor plans to compete in South Carolina, Missouri, New Mexico and Arizona, which holds contests next Tuesday; Michigan and Washington state four days later; and Wisconsin, with its contest Feb. 17.

Several Dean advisers had urged him to pick fewer targets, cherry-picking states to conserve resources, but he vetoed the strategy, insisting that his campaign was muscular enough to compete nationally.

In the AP interview, Dean acknowledged that advisers urged him to skip South Carolina. "There was some discussion about it," he said. "I never gave it any thought."

Dean had raised more than $200,000 in the 24 hours before the primary, but he has been spending money just as fast as raising it — and he will keep up the pricey pace with his new strategy.

His eye warily cast toward the fall, Bush planned a trip to New Hampshire to counter criticism heaped his way during the Democratic race. He used a similar tactic after Iowa's caucuses, scheduling his State of the Union address one day after that contest.

About 200,000 voters participated in the Democratic primary, easily eclipsing the record 170,000 turnout in 1992 when Paul Tsongas defeated then Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton.

Voters in the primary were evenly split between Democrats and independents. A third of the independents backed Kerry, a fourth backed Dean and the rest were split among Edwards, Clark and Lieberman.

Surveys of New Hampshire voters showed Kerry's support was broad-based with equally strong support among women and men, all age groups. His support was slightly higher among those whose financial situations have gotten worse in the last four years.

The exit poll was conducted for the AP by Edison Media Research and Mitofsky International.

said he thinks the new system is a good idea.

"I understand that idea, but the problem is that it's a serious problem now," Hickman said. "It's better to be safe than sorry."

Hickman said that making a new number would be a problem if he had to use that meant potential problems in the future.

"I'd rather take the time to learn my number now than have to worry about problems in the future," he said.

Putnam said all new students this semester received their new UIN in their welcome package. Email will be sent out to accounts informing students about the change and how they can access their new UIN.

Gates

The actions of the Legislature's next session affect whether or not tuition continues to rise.

"The amount of the increase isn't to be taken into account," said Student President Matt Josey. "The more students that are affected about this, the more the tuition opinions we'll have."

There were 81 students who attended the forum, which more students than Josey ever remembered seeing at an event of this nature. Not all students in attendance agreed with Gates' proposal.

Mark McCaig, a junior in business major, said a lot of students are going to have a hard time affording such an increase in tuition.

"The 35 percent increase is the latest increase is excessive," McCaig said.

Gates said the increase would have been a good idea except for the fact that the Government Association would encourage the administration to keep it minimal for the next semester because families already set their budgets.

"I view my role as disseminating information to as many students as possible," Josey said. "It is imperative that students use the Tuition Policy Advisory Committee to voice their suggestions, concerns and opinions known."

A link to the Tuition Policy Advisory Committee's Web will be available from the Student Government Association Web site at <http://sga.tamu.edu>.
