mission." Valesek said NASA must learn from this accident.

"What happens with this accident is not doing anything different, it's paying more attention and doing a better job," Valesek said.

Valesek said the Columbia tragedy has not had negative effects on the A&M aerospace engineering program, but has strengthened its resolve to put forth a maximum effort in everything.

Amanda Garcia, a junior business major, said she has kept up with the briefings and press conferences about the tragedy.

"I've noticed that the staff at NASA seems like they are being more cautious and trying to watch out," Garcia said. "They are really trying to forecast what they are doing."

Christian Vondrehle, a senior psychology major, said he felt connected to the tragedy because he attended space camp as a kid.

"I was astonished, because I didn't believe something like this would happen," Vondrehle said. "I think it put a bunch of doubts in people's minds."

Chris Mount, a senior civil engineering major, said as sad as the tragedy was, that he hopes NASA will learn from its mistakes, and move forward.

"I do not think we should let this stop our progression into space, because in everything we do there is some risk," Mount said. "But I think the worst thing we could do is stop space travel."

Burt said NASA's progress is evident in the advancements it has made over the year.

"At the beginning of the year, it was so sad because these astronauts trusted us, and we let them down," Burt said. "But now it doesn't get more exciting than this, with the Mars mission and Bush's plan to move forward."

The astronauts will be honored with a memorial at Arlington National Cemetery today at 2 p.m. according to www.nasa.gov. Although the service is closed to the public, NASA TV will provide live coverage.

"The power of our mission is to carry on," Burt said. "I think the seven people who perished would want us to do that."

NEWS IN BRIEF

Presidential rivals work to sway undecided

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — Democratic presidential rivals worked across several time zones Sunday to sway undecided voters in states with contests early this week.

Sen. John Kerry pressed his front-runner's advantage in North Dakota and Sen. John Edwards concentrated on South Carolina, a state he says he must win. Edwards trails Kerry in six of the seven states holding primaries or caucuses on Tuesday, except in his native South Carolina.

Retired Gen. Wesley Clark borrowed a page from Kerry's campaign playbook, reuniting with a soldier credited with saving his life in Vietnam, while Sen. Joe Lieberman welcomed a new round of newspaper endorsements.

Arizona, Delaware, Missouri, Oklahoma and South Carolina hold primaries Tuesday, along with caucuses in New Mexico and North Dakota.
