SPORTS THE BATTALION

Tuesday, February 2, 2004

A&M senior forward Jesse King goes for a dunk against a Texas defender Saturday in Texas's 69-59 win over the Aggies. King is averaging 12.8 points and 5.8 rebounds per game.

Aggies

"I think they're one of the best rebounding teams in the conference," Sutton said. "I have a variety of players who can score, but I think rebounding is going to be a major key in this game. Rebounding has been one of our weaknesses. We didn't rebound Saturday night very well. Tech, and Texas A&M have a lot more powerful front players than Tech does."

While out-rebounding Oklahoma State will cut the Cowboys scoring chances those rebounds won't put up on the scoreboard for Aggies. Rebounding totals count in the win column, but the Aggies want to get a shot on its Big 12 belt. "We need to find someone to get the ball in the basket."

"Definitely it's an opportunity, but unfortunately Oklahoma State is not going to cooperate so well," Watkins said. "It's a home game and we'll have a good crowd. Hopefully we'll get on track."

Finding that go-to player could be tough for Watkins' team. For the past four years former Aggie guard Ben King was that player, and he had been conditioned to know that King is gone.

But without a consistent Wright, another Aggie will have to conform to a role that has previously been asked of the team's primary scoring threat. "It may be Nick (Anderson) it may be Jesse King or it may be Andy Slocum," Watkins said. "We just have to identify who and get him the ball."

New England not ready for dynasty talk

By Dave Goldberg THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON — Bill Belichick shies away from the "D" word. Yet even after winning their second Super Bowl in three seasons, the New England Patriots seem to be as close to a dynasty as any team can be in an era of parity.

But if "D" doesn't mean dynasty, it could certainly mean dominant. "I don't want to get into all of that," Belichick said Monday, less than 12 hours after the Patriots beat the Carolina Panthers 32-29.

"I don't know about our legacy, but two titles in three years in the environment of the NFL these days is quite an achievement."

— Charlie Weiss
 New England offensive coordinator

"The NFL is so competitive, 32 teams on a level field banging their heads to get here. It's hard to think that way."

On the surface, the Patriots seemed dominant. They finished with 15 straight wins, joining the unbeaten 1972 Dolphins (17-0) as the only teams to accomplish that feat in a single season.

But nine of New England's 15 victories were by eight points or less, and only a 31-0 win over Buffalo in the regular-season finale was truly one-sided. Both their Super Bowl wins have come on last-second field goals by Adam Vinatieri, unquestionably the best clutch kicker in the game.

Still, in a league where the salary cap and free agency make it difficult for a successful team to keep its players, New England is in a unique situation.

The Patriots have so many players chosen for their ability to play a specific role, it should be easier for them to keep their roster nearly intact, unlike Baltimore, which won in 2001 and has just started to rebound after shedding a number of high-salaried players.

But the Patriots do have some cap problems. Quarterback Tom Brady and cornerback Ty Law, who will count somewhere around $17 million against the $79 million cap next season.

The 26-year-old Brady, who won his second Super Bowl MVP trophy, certainly isn't going anywhere. But Law, who had three interceptions in the AFC title game and who will be just 30 next season, could go — unless he restructures his contract.

Still, the Patriots separate themselves from the pack by their ability to plug in an obscure player for a solid starter and not lose a thing.

New England quarterback Tom Brady looks to complete a pass during the fourth quarter of Super Bowl XXXVIII Sunday at Reliant Stadium in Houston. The Patriots won 32-29 to take their second World Championship in three years. Brady was named Super Bowl XXXVIII MVP.

For example, Belichick cut safety Lawyer Milloy just before the start of the regular season. Rookie Eugene Wilson, a cornerback in college, took his place with little dropoff.

Rookies also could be a big part in next season's Patriots.

Six made major contributions this season, and New England will have two first-rounders in April's draft — the 21st and 32nd overall. That could allow them to trade up for a prime player or simply sit back and take what Belichick prefers: guys who fit specific roles.

Most importantly, the Patriots are a "team" in the true sense of the word.

None of the Patriots' three top receivers — second-year men Deion Branch and David Givens and 11-year veteran Troy

Brown — are stars. Yet Branch catches for 143 yards in the Super Bowl while Brown had eight for 76 and Givens five for 69.

"I wouldn't trade that group of receivers for any in the league," Brady said.

So, count on the Patriots to do especially if they continue to draft well as they have in past years.

Sure, they missed the playoffs in 2003, finishing 9-7 and losing the NFL on a tiebreaker, and they could go again next season — they call it EVERY close game.

"I don't know about our league's offensive coordinator Charlie Weiss. But two titles in three years in the environment of the NFL these days is quite an achievement."
