other events such as war, Kouchner said.

Kouchner said Doctors Without Borders began because of difficulties encountered in reaching those in need of aid in Third World or war-torn countries.

Developing nations are in dire need of U.S. assistance and involvement, Kouchner said, and the United States needs to be willing to work with other countries in humanitarian efforts.

"We must work with other nations to approach the needy nations," Kouchner said.

Kouchner stressed the importance of globalization and of being focused on humanitarian aid, instead of politics.

The SCONA conference attracts students from all over the country, said Susan Speliopoulos, SCONA adviser.

"There's a group of about 30 committed student leaders who have been working for 10 months to make the vision become a reality," Speliopoulos said.

There are two major components of the conference: speakers and round tables, vice chair of SCONA Jared Nelson said.

"The speakers give their personal insight into the policies toward developing nations that work and those that do not. Delegates can take those situations and apply them toward the policy they are discussing," Nelson said.

Students were then divided into small round table groups for discussion.

"Each round table writes a proposal for U.S. policy," said Sydney Woodington, chair of SCONA.

"The policies are judged at the end of the conference by various civic leaders, faculty members and government officials."

The conference will continue through Saturday evening.

Josefy said students need to take responsibility to reduce neighborhood disorders so the council will have no reason to consider this decrease.

"We, as students, need to convince these residents that we, as Aggies, can be good neighbors, and we don't necessarily cause problems everywhere we live," Josefy said.

Peter Kern, lead code enforcement officer in Lubbock, said the city of Lubbock allows only two unrelated persons to live in a single-family home. Kern said the code is usually only enforced when a disturbance is made, such as parking problems or noise violations.

"We get involved when we have behavior problems that cause tension," Kern said. "Usually, nobody knows and nobody pursues. But when they start having parties, too many cars and no parking, it becomes a problem."

Kern said he would not suggest that College Station limit the number of people allowed to live at home; instead, he thinks College Station should address problems individually.

"The best way to look at this is to go after problems caused," Kern said. "They need to address the situation of bedrooms and parking and look at what the area can stand."

Along with the survey topic of decreasing number of people who can live together, the chiefs also presented topics such as limiting street parking, requiring garages and requiring one parking space per bedroom.

McIntyre

McIntyre said he believes that Texas A&M is a special place in District 17 because of the education and research it provides to the local community, but he said that it could be the best national security.

"Texas A&M, with its extensive research program, can be utilized in homeland security with proper government funding," McIntyre said.

McIntyre said he believes that with help from Congress and someone like him who with his homeland security expertise, A&M could be one of the leading institutions to solve these problems.

Asher Henegar, a senior biology major, said McIntyre shows qualities of a candidate who is about A&M.

"It's nice to see a candidate with strong values and concerns with local issues as well as national issues, but I love the fact he sees the future potential in Texas A&M," Henegar said.

McIntyre said he is focused on local issues but also remains focused on the important national issues.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Michigan to charge serial killer suspect in 1979 death to keep him behind bars

DETROIT (AP) — Michigan's attorney general plans to prosecute a confessed serial killer for a 1979 slaying to try to prevent the man's scheduled release from a Texas prison in two years.

Attorney General Mike Cox said Thursday he would file a first-degree murder charge against Coral E. Watts, 50, for the 1979 stabbing of a Detroit woman.

The government is barred from using Watts' admissions in 13 other killings under a plea bargain for burglary sentence he has been serving since 1992.

"This man is a confessed killing machine who has promised to kill again," Cox said at a news conference.

The murder charge expected later Thursday involves Helen Dutcher, 36, whose body was found in the driveway of a dry cleaners in suburban Ferndale.
