Herreth

Services Fees, allowing money to go back to students in the form of various programs.

Herreth said he has been working with Transportation Services and has developed a parking plan where all blue and yellow lots would open after 5:30 p.m. for the use of all students, regardless of what color parking pass they have. Herreth said he supports TS Director Rodney Weis' parking plan, because he feels it will help the current parking situation live up to its potential.

Herreth said he does not have a specific plan for campus unity during the fall, but that his plan to add living-learning communities to Northside residence halls will help unify students.

"Every SBP since Zac Coventry has said this is what we're going to do in the fall, and this is going to cure our problem," Herreth said. "I don't have one of those, because I know that's not going to cure our problem."

Herreth said he likes A&M President Robert M. Gates' admissions plan and that he wants to increase diversity through recruitment and retention using diversity programs already set up by student government.

"The admissions plan Dr. Gates has set forth is right on target," Herreth said. "We don't like quotas and Dr. Gates' plan doesn't allow for quotas."

Herreth said he agrees with Vision 2020 and the hiring of new faculty, as long as Aggie traditions aren't lost.

"I think Vision 2020 is a great idea on paper as long as the students don't lose their experience here at A&M," Herreth said.

Herreth said he would work hard to get students' voices heard by the administration.

"You have to be firm," he said. "You have to know what the students want and take that and not give up until those ideas and those concerns are strongly heard. You have to go in there with valid reasons, your ideas to back those up, and just stay strong."

is a program for change, and he wants to put the responsibility of change on the students.

"I am going to leave it up to the students; whatever they want is what I am going to try to make happen," he said.

On the issue of Bonfire, Hernandez said he supports what the students want, and that he would support an off-campus bonfire because the students want it.

Hernandez also said he wants to work to move Bonfire back on campus, and wants to set up a committee to gather the opinion of the student body for an on-campus bonfire.

"I am going to definitely work on moving Bonfire back on campus, because I am going to represent the student's wishes," he said.

Hernandez said he realizes parking is a huge issue and that he would work with the administration and students to find a solution to the problem.

"We need to make sure that we have enough money we can spend on the parking situation; I will work with the administration to make sure it is financially and operationally efficient," he said.

Hernandez said he wants to be visible and approachable to students, and he wants people to get to know him.

"I want to be there for one, and make sure people know me," he said.

He said he will go out and meet people and ask them what they want him to do for the year, emphasizing that students have a responsibility to help if he were to become student body president.

"I expect students to be a good student body president; you have to go out and ask students what they want and what they expect," Hernandez said.

Kibler

"They have a clear vision for the future and how the VP for student affairs will be part of that," Kibler said. "They also have a plan to grow although they are the largest university in the state of Mississippi. I hope I can provide the leadership and direction to cause the institution to grow some."

Bob Strawser, chair of the vice president for student affairs search committee at A&M and an accounting professor, said that when Kibler and two other candidates were interviewed last fall, the committee chose not to recommend them to A&M President Robert M. Gates and reopened the search.

Strawser said he has worked with Kibler for a long time on committees, such as the Honor Council Committee, and MSU is gaining a great person and a good student affairs administrator.

"If Jackie Sherrill were Mississippi State, so can Kibler," Strawser said.

Matt Josefy, student body president and a senior accounting major, said he has developed good relationships with Kibler, both professionally and personally.

"(He) integrates all of himself and family and has done that for many years," Josefy said.

Josefy said Kibler instilled a lot of projects that would have begun without his support and influence that will benefit the University even after he leaves.

"He will be a legacy for a long time," Josefy said.

Kibler said joining the staff will be a change, but there will be familiar stages and experiences that will be familiar at A&M.

"I see it more as joining a new family as opposed to taking a new job," Kibler said.
