Tyco jurors tell judge deliberations have turned 'poisonous' Thursday

By Samuel Maull
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Jury deliberations in the corporate corruption trial of two former Tyco International executives descended into acrimony Thursday as jurors complained that the atmosphere had turned "poisonous."

The judge refused to grant a defense request for a mistrial, but jurors were sent home for the day to cool off after revealing the extent of the bitterness in the jury room.

Jurors sent three notes to state Supreme Court Justice Michael Obus saying discussions had disintegrated to the point where some members had swapped "incendiary accusations." They were in their sixth day of deliberations.

"The atmosphere in the jury room has turned poisonous," one of the notes said.

Another note said at least one juror "does not have an open mind. The disagreement is so intense that it has resulted in very bad acrimony. Perhaps this jury cannot continue. What shall we do?"

Defense attorney Austin Campriello, representing ex-Tyco chief executive officer L. Dennis Kozlowski, said: "We believe our right to a fair trial no longer exists."

Prosecutors say Kozlowski and former Tyco chief financial officer Mark Swartz looted the company of $600 million. They allegedly took unauthorized bonuses and abused company loan programs to finance their lavish lifestyles, including a $6,000 shower curtain and a $2 million toga party.

The jury notes came as a surprise. Jurors earlier asked the court to "indulge us with more time" before they returned to the courtroom to hear a readback of testimony.

The defense argued that the two had earned every dime and that the company's auditors and board of directors knew about the compensation and never objected.

Kozlowski, 57, and Swartz, 43, are charged with grand larceny, falsifying business records and violating state business laws. They could get up to 30 years in prison each if convicted.

On Wednesday, jurors were given evidence they had requested on Tyco's lavish relocation benefits for employees, and on a $20 million finder's fee paid to a company board member.

The finder's fee and the bonuses are related to one of the top charges against Swartz and Kozlowski, grand larceny.

Tyco compensates top executives

Tyco International shareholders overwhelmingly voted against a proposal to hold executive salaries and bonuses to a maximum of $1 million a year and to limit other compensation.

Woman found competent for trial in son's death

SEYMOUR, Texas (AP) — A woman charged with killing her 10-year-old autistic son and staging his death to look like a car accident has been found competent to stand trial.

Melanie Rochelle Dickson, 33, has pleaded innocent by reason of insanity. She is accused of slashing her son's wrists, his Achilles tendons and his throat in a Seymour motel room in 2002.

The next morning, Dickson was found sitting next to her vehicle in a 15-foot ravine. The body of her son, Mitchell, was pinned beneath the wreckage in what authorities believe was a faked accident.

Dickson had identical slash wounds to her son's, including an almost fatal cut on her neck, authorities said. Bloody razor blades lay near the vehicle, and she had one in her purse, authorities said.

Dr. Richard E. Coons, an Austin psychiatrist, testified at a competency hearing Wednesday that Dickson was rational, able to discuss her case with her attorney and understand the charge against her. He said her suicide attempts were triggered by substance abuse and bipolar disorder but that medications stabilized her.

State District Judge David Hajek then ruled that, under state laws, Dickson was competent to stand trial.

The trial is set for April in Fredericksburg, a change of venue from Baylor County, defense attorney Mick Payne said.

Dickson is being held in the Rolling Plains Regional Detention Center in Haskell, $100,000 bond.

Dickson's mother told the Wichita Falls Times Record News that her daughter has severe mental illness and has been taking medication for years.
