Fee

"We are all worried about the cost of education, but there's a difference between tuition fees. Tuition just went $19.50 per credit hour, and only fee that I know is going to increase is the student service fee. In my opinion, and it is one of the benefits students."

Josefy encouraged students to get information about the increase and to vote on Wednesday and Thursday.

"There is room for many opinions on campus, and demonstration is an example of that," Josefy said. "The student chance to voice their concerns on Wednesday and Thursday."

Jim Carlson, chair of Student Service Fee Advisory Board, said he did not see a protest, but is disappointed students would protest against the fee increase.

"I respect students' opinions and it's disappointing to see students so against something that benefits the students so strongly," Carlson said.

Immediately after the protesters dumped the crates into Fish Pond, several students went to the pond and pulled out the crates.

Rob McClelland, a senior construction science major who is campaigning at Fish Pond at the time of the demonstration, said he removed the crates because he did not want the protest associated with the campaigners.

"I didn't want that tied with someone's campaign," McClelland said.

McClelland said the protest was defacing the campus.

"I don't have a problem with free speech, but not at the expense of defacing campus property or making Fish Pond look messed up," McClelland said.

Amnesty

finding people with Class C misdemeanors, Spillane said. Such misdemeanors include those for traffic violations, minor in possession, driving under the influence, noise violations and theft under $50.

The Bryan and Collin Station Police Departments will find these individuals, Phelan said, and they will then be arrested, in which case they must pay their fees or stay in jail until they've seen a judge.

If people aren't found during the roundup, their names and driver license numbers will be sent to the Department of Public Safety, and they will not be able to renew their driver licenses until fees are paid, Spillane said.

Spillane said these amnesty periods have been very successful in the past.

"Last year we pulled in $38,417," Spillane said. "Only a few people came in. This (amnesty period) is a way to help clear cases and help citizens not be scared." There are currently 3,000 outstanding warrants in the area, Spillane said.

Students said they welcome the opportunity to take care of any mark on their record.

"I think it's a good opportunity to wipe the slate clean and overcome problems from the past," said Tim Kuhn, a sophomore business major.

Chad Richards, a freshman general studies major, said enrollment in the Corps should not affect if someone is elected as yell leader. He said it should be based on who is going to represent traditions the most.

Baumgartner said he does not think that one should run a campaign stressing whether they are a member of the Corps.

"One should vote based on the person," Baumgartner said. "Vote for a candidate, not a uniform."

Jacob Scher, a sophomore business major, said he respects the Corps' place in the University. He said students should not vote for him solely because he is the only candidate running for junior yell leader who is not in the Corps.

The panel also allowed the yell leaders to stress the importance of their position.

"A&M has given me so much, and I'd love the opportunity to give back," said Askew, a junior yell leader candidate and sophomore agricultural development major.

Askew, who received the distinction of most outstanding freshman in the Corps his freshman year, said there is a problem in keeping everyone involved.

"Football isn't what makes Kyle Field," Askew said. "It's the spirit of Aggieland."

Haley, a junior business major, said he would love nothing more than giving back as senior yell leader next year. Haley expressed his willingness to be adaptable in any situation and bring the Aggie spirit out in people.

"We must revive the spirit," he said.

Bishop said the position of yell leader is one of service and commitment to A&M. He wants to be reelected because of his love for the traditions at A&M.

"Any time you believe in something, it makes you want to serve it," Bishop said. "The most important role (as a yell leader) is to serve Texas A&M and not think about yourself."

Paul Terrell, a junior agricultural business major and current yell leader, said he has been honored to serve as a junior yell leader this year and has enjoyed attending several events.

"I've been at as many events as I can make," Terrell said.

Baumgartner said he sees the yell leader position as one that represents the student body as a whole.

"They are seen throughout the nation as the heart of Aggieland," Baumgartner said. "By being a yell leader, you are out in front of everyone, and everyone knows who you are."

Hebert, a sophomore sports management major, said he sees the best thing about being a yell leader as having an impact on people's lives.

"I have not always been the biggest person, but I stand up for what I believe in," Hebert said.

Scher said that ever since the day he stepped foot on the A&M campus, he has loved every second of being here.

"I love this school, the spirit and the traditions more than anything," Scher said.

Scher said he wants to make a difference and an impact on people.

Logan Wright, a sophomore marketing major, said that after attending the forum, she wishes there were seven yell leaders.

"I have a good feeling about all seven candidates," Wright said. "It is unfortunate that a negative connotation has been brought up. If we strive for campus unity, we need to not run a basher campaign."

NEWS IN BRIEF

NYC taxi commission approves first fare increase in eight years

NEW YORK — The cost of a cab ride in the big city is about to go up by more than 25 percent under the first fare increase in eight years.

The Taxi & Limousine Commission on Tuesday voted to raise the base rate for stepping into a cab from $2 to $2.50, and increase the price for traveling every a fifth of a mile from 30 cents to 40 cents, beginning in May.

The commission also approved a new $1-per-passenger charge between 4 p.m. and 8 p.m.

Owners and drivers of New York's 12,000 yellow cabs had petitioned for higher fares, saying the cost of a cab ride had remained unchanged for too long.
