FISH

BY JOSH DARWIN Reed

"The speech gave us a unique perspective of the Civil War that we haven't gotten from our textbooks," said Cagle, junior biomedical sciences major.

Yulia Botvich, a graduate of Texas A&M Class of 2002, she grew up in Russia seeing the Cold War from the other side and that she was concerned about her generation's lack of concern from American students about her learning from Russians with learning about such a historical event.

"I believe it is important for people to see why the Civil War took place, because the more you know about history, the more likely you can prevent future incidents like the one Botvich said.

Reed ended his speech with some words of warning for the United States' security and future.

"There are some difficult problems ahead of us; we need to balance our personal freedoms but make sure we're secure," he said.

blood, and that a donation is divided into three parts: whole blood, plasma and platelets. Therefore, one Aggie's donation can benefit three different people, but there's still a shortage of blood due to constant demand, she said.

"Every two seconds someone in the U.S. needs blood," Hale said. "Fewer and fewer people are donating blood, but the demand is always increasing. When you consider that six units of blood are used for a heart transplant, and an auto accident can use up to 40 units, anyone can see that we need all the blood we can get."

The University Round-up Challenge Blood

Drive is an event that allows people to give to the community.

"The really cool thing is, The Texas Star Day Foundation has promised to donate one book to Bryan-College Station area schools for every pint of blood that is donated," said Jacqui Bourland, president of Alpha Phi Omega.

The American Red Cross will be collecting blood on campus at Rudder Fountain, Sbis, the Biochemistry-Biophysics Building, the Commons, Zachry and Wehner.

"Currently only 3 percent of Texans give blood, but it is a wonderful way to give back to the community," Bourland said. "I would really encourage anyone who can donate blood to do so, not only because of the importance of blood collection, but also for literacy."

Animal Planet

A camel with no hump? A leopard with no spots? An elephant with no trunk? This is definitely not an everyday trip to the zoo! It's a fun-filled new musical starring six of your favorite animals. Filled with vivid costumes and plenty of sing along tunes, JUST SO STORIES, based on Rudyard Kipling's masterpiece, will have you laughing, singing and dancing in the aisles!
