Aaron Kinsey that asked for the entire student body elections to be redone, and that stated the Election Commission was biased in favor of Hildebrand.

Walther said this appeal also dealt with the prorating of election materials. He said the Election Commission allowed all candidates to prorate unused materials, but that Hildebrand was the only one who took advantage of it because he asked.

"In the future, the Election Commission needs to either disallow prorating, or make it clear to everyone that it is an option," Walther said. "It is their duty to provide an equal opportunity for every candidate no matter what the workload would be by doing so."

Hildebrand said he was pleased with the ruling and that now he can finally begin to concentrate on his new position.

"Now we can focus on what we started, which is focusing on students," he said.

VanAlstyne

would not show favoritism toward the Corps.

"He will truly represent and adhere to all students' wants and needs," Hildebrand said.

VanAlstyne said he will find out students' wants and needs by talking to student leaders and average students.

Corps Commander-designate and junior finance major John Huffman said that VanAlstyne is well-known for having a strong connection with the student body.

"The amazing thing about the Commandant is General VanAlstyne knows more about individual students than anyone," Huffman said. "His pulse is on the quad."

Huffman said VanAlstyne can not only point out individuals by name, but that he knows what outfit they are in, their interests and their grades.

VanAlstyne said the most important parts of being a leader is communication and patience. He said these qualities apply to all forms of leadership.

"I will resist the idea there is a (difference between) military leadership, corporate leadership and academic leadership," VanAlstyne said.

He said that to accomplish the most for students, he will align himself with objectives by Texas A&M President Robert M. Gates to secure scarce resources.

"Under the calm, serene surface of the campus there are rabid knife fights for resources and my philosophy has been to take a gun to a knife fight," VanAlstyne said.

He said he plans on entering the military without preconceived notions of what to do. But, he said the four areas he sees as supporting that fall into the division of student affairs are enhancing undergraduate experience, creating a University leadership development program, revising the Aggie Code of Honor and promoting diversity on campus.

VanAlstyne graduated from A&M in 1970 and returned in October 2002 to lead the Corps commandant after 36 years of service in the U.S. Army. While in the military, he served as deputy assistant Secretary of Defense, commanding general of the Army Training Center and chief of staff of the 24th Infantry Division during the Persian Gulf War.

The search committee should begin its recommendations to Gates by next week, said committee member and Student Body President Matt Josefy.
