Cowboys plan new stadium

DALLAS (AP) — America's team still apparently wants to put Dallas back in the Cowboys' name, pushing for a plan to finance a new $1 billion stadium development in the city partly with hotel and rental car taxes.

Cowboys vice president Stephen Jones, who met with Dallas Mayor Laura Miller on Tuesday to discuss the Fair Park site, said the team was close to announcing its location but would not reveal any details.

Several Dallas City Council members said this week that they believe the team will announce plans to move back to Fair Park just southeast of downtown, where the Cowboys played until moving to suburban Irving's Texas Stadium in 1971. But the plan continues to hinge on raising up to $400 million of the project through taxes.

"It'd be a good investment," Jones said of the $400 million. "Obviously, the Dallas Cowboys will be one tenant. There are a lot of other people beyond the Dallas Cowboys that are going to be involved."

Cowboys representatives, in meetings with Dallas County commissioners Monday and Tuesday, "talked about the kind of global support they are getting across the board for Fair Park," said Commissioner Mike Cantrell.

The team's political advisers in the last several weeks commissioned a poll that showed support for a taxpayer-financed stadium at Fair Park, county officials said. They said the poll showed that 58 percent of respondents supported financing for a Fair Park stadium.

"The survey came back very favorable for Fair Park," Commissioner Kenneth Mayfield told The Dallas Morning News in Wednesday's editions. "They said they would bring a proposal back pretty quickly."

He and several other commissioners said they were that a site announcement would be made next week.

The mayor said Cowboys representatives "asked me about Fair Park," adding the issue was in the hands of county commissioners.

"The majority of the council believes Fair Park is it," council member Bill Blum, who favors a site the city initially identified just west of downtown Dallas.

That Industrial Boulevard site, according to a city report, would require transportation improvements, environmental remediation and land acquisition that would cost $166 million.

The location where the State of Texas is held annually has highways and other structure. Part of the Bowl might have to be razed for the development, which has an estimated cost of $650 million.
