Richard Adams, dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine, said A&M submitted a proposal to be a partner for the center, and that there were three other universities considered.

"It is really good to see A&M to be selected for preparing for the future attacks," Adams said.

A&M President Robert Gates said in a statement that he is pleased with A&M's selection as the lead institution for the center and thanked the Texas A&M board of regents for their role in creating the center.

"Texas A&M and its partners will make a significant contribution toward the nation's security excellence," Gates said.

The Department of Homeland Security said that The University of Minnesota will head the partnership.

Harrington. "I thought he set the tone, I thought we played great defense, and when this team plays defense we have a chance to win." great defense, and when this team plays defense we have a chance to win.

Gonzales held the Aggies hitless until the fifth inning, eventually giving up only two hits in six innings of work. The Bobcats' bullpen then picked up where their starter left off by shutting down the Aggies for the rest of the night.

"He was just a lot better than we were," said A&M head coach Mark Johnson. "I was pleased with our pitching and that was the real question mark going in, but we couldn't make an adjustment to him. That's disappointing because you have to make adjustments, and our hitters didn't do that tonight."

The Aggies' best chance for a run came in the eighth inning, but they couldn't come up with the needed hits. Junior left fielder Travis Bartek led off the inning with a hard single to right. Senior second baseman Matt Alexander's attempted sacrifice bunt, however, went straight back to the pitcher who threw Bartek out at second.

But all was not lost for the inning as the next batter, sophomore Cliff Pennington, drew a walk. Sophomore first baseman Coby Mavroulis then hit a sacrifice fly deep to center field, which advanced Alexander, the potential tying run, to third base. But the Aggies squandered the opportunity, as senior right fielder Cory Patton flew out to center, ending the inning.

In the ninth, the heart of the Aggies' order had no chance against Bobcat junior closer Dominic Ramos. Ramos quickly retired the Aggies to end the game.

Despite the loss, the Aggies were pleased with their pitching. Sophomore starter Dan Donaldson looked strong in four innings of work. Unlike the Aggies, the Bobcats came through with a needed run when junior left fielder Matt Miller's single scored junior third baseman Kyle Anson from second base in the top of the fourth inning. "We had a great read by our baserunner," Harrington said. "The ball left and looked like it could be caught, but Kyle did a great job baserunning."

The Aggies will try to recover from this tough loss as they head to Lincoln, Neb., for a weekend series against the Cornhuskers.
