NEWS IN BRIEF

Enron ex-trader's guilty plea to aid states with energy lawsuits

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A former Enron Corp. trader is obliged to help public utilities as part of a plea agreement in which he admitted manipulating energy markets during California's power crisis in 2001.

John Forney, 42, of Upper Arlington, Ohio, is the third Enron official to plead guilty to manipulating electricity prices from Enron's now-defunct trading office in Portland, Ore. The crisis played a role in Pacific Gas & Electric Co.'s bankruptcy and will leave California consumers paying abnormally high electricity prices for years.

With the guilty plea Thursday, Forney is expected to cooperate with the ongoing investigation into Houston-based Enron, as well as reveal details about how other energy firms may have played a role, U.S. Attorney Kevin Ryan said. Four employees of Reliant Corp. have already been charged with deliberately shutting down power plants to increase the price of California electricity.

"We're interested in sitting down and having a good conversation with Mr. Forney to see what he may have to offer our body of evidence," said Tom Dresslar, a spokesman for California Attorney General Bill Lockyer, who has filed dozens of energy companies seeking billions in damages.

Commission member believes Bush will back reforms

HOUSTON (AP) — The Sept. 11 Commission would not support any legislation that didn't include its recommendations to overhaul the national intelligence apparatus, particularly the creation of a director with power to control budgets and personnel, a member of the investigative group said Thursday.

But Republican John Lehman said he's confident President Bush, who differs with the commission on how much power a new intelligence director should have, will change his mind.
