CAMPUS BRIEFS

Honor System Office to be operational Wednesday

Texas A&M University's new Aggie Honor System Office (AHSO) will become fully operational Wednesday (Sept. 1) with the four-fold goal of promoting education, prevention, training and implementation of academic integrity.

AHSO Director Nicole Brannen said the office was created to continue and enhance the traditions of promoting education, prevention, training and implementation of academic integrity. Brannen said the office will serve as a centralized location for reporting to academic integrity violations to assist both students and faculty through the education process.

When students accept admission to Texas A&M, they immediately assume a commitment to uphold the honor code and to accept responsibility for learning and following the philosophy and rules of the system, Bradford said. The education function will inform students the sanctions that can be assessed when information is acquired from unauthorized sources, when provide information without authorization, plagiarize or otherwise violate academic rules. Assesses also will be provided to help students understand their rights and what is expected of them both inside and outside the classroom.

Exhibits opened Monday in MSC Forsyth Center

The exhibit "Clearly English" will be on display in the Galleries through Dec. 18. The second exhibit is "A Bit of Quiet: English Watercolors and Paintings." This includes a selection of English paintings of private lenders that accompanied the "Clearly English" exhibit at the MSC Forsyth Center Galleries. The English watercolor exhibit also be on display through Dec. 18. Contact the Galleries at 845-5139 or visit: <http://forsyth.tamu.edu/main.html> for any questions.

Convention

day the president stood atop a rubble at Ground Zero and vowed to avenge the attacks. He invited Bush to Ronald Reagan and Winston Churchill for holding fast convictions in the face of misadventure. "Some call it stubbornness. I call it principled leadership," he said.

Bush, he added, "sees world terrorism for the evil that it is. Kerry has no such clear, precise, consistent vision."

The delegates met at Madison Square Garden, four miles from where the World Trade Center twin towers once stood — gathering under security so tight that umbrellas were banned from the hall as potential weapons.

With polls showing Bush's leadership in the war on terrorism a political strength, a parade of speakers repeatedly urged return at the podium to summit memories of Sept. 11, 2001.

"Timmy is my hero. I am honored to share him with you," Tara Stackpole, widow of a Marine fighter who went into the towers but never came out, said. "I am proud to lend America's oldest son, Kevin, who is back to Iraq in December with his unit," she said before her husband's remembrance for more than 2,000 who perished in the attacks.

In a prelude to the evening's political oratory, delegates lauded Bush's unflinchingly conservative re-election platform and his response to the terrorist attacks, declaring, "The president's most solemn duty is to protect our country. George W. Bush has kept that charge."
