Residents of the coast town of Luquillo run away during a short shower while looking back at the outer storm swells of Hurricane Frances at their beach about 45 miles east of San Juan, Puerto Rico, Tuesday. Hurricane Frances brushed Puerto Rico with pounding and blustery winds as its powerful vortex swirled offshore on Tuesday for the Bahamas and the Southeastern United States.

Hurricane grazes Puerto Rico

LUQUILLO, Puerto Rico — Hurricane Frances strengthened to a dangerous Category 4 hurricane Tuesday, with sustained winds up to 140 mph. Many Puerto Ricans remained in their homes and prepared to ride out the winds and rains on the fringes of the hurricane.

"We're still recovering from the last floods in November. We're a bit nervous," said Fernando Morales, a truck driver who set his furniture on blocks to prevent damage. Last time, he said, water filled his home in the eastern town of Fajardo and destroyed all his belongings.

Surfers rode the hurricane's crashing swells Tuesday, while some people concerned about coastal flooding sandbagged their doors.

Though little damage was expected in the U.S. territory, many offices and schools closed. Courts canceled session, and all 18 casinos in Puerto Rico were closed.

Offices and schools also were closed in the U.S. Virgin Islands, where the hurricane brought rains and gusty winds.

The hurricane prompted tropical storm warnings for Puerto Rico, the British Virgin Islands, U.S. Virgin Islands and the north coast of the Dominican Republic.

The Bahamas issued a hurricane warning for its southeastern islands and a hurricane watch for its central islands. The storm was expected to plow into the chain of more than 700 islands starting Wednesday or Thursday. A hurricane warning also was posted for the Turks and Caicos Islands.

The Bahamian government was urging people in the southern eastern cays to move to larger islands, said Carl Smith, the national disaster coordinator. One of the most vulnerable islands was Great Inagua, with a population of about 600.

"We're reminding people to get water, food supplies and batteries, and to know what shelter is close to their residence," Smith said.

At least 14 flights from Puerto Rico were canceled, said Francisco Sosa, the general manager of Luis Munoz Marin International Airport in San Juan.
