Rumsfeld: Iraqis will recapture areas controlled by insurgents

By Robert Burns
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said Tuesday he is confident the interim Iraqi government will find a way to retake cities now in the hands of insurgents.

He also expressed sympathy for the rising number of American military deaths in Iraq, now more than 1,000 since the start of the war.

"We certainly honor the courage and sacrifice of every man and woman in uniform who has served in Iraq and who is currently serving there," he said. "And, needless to say, we mourn with the families of those lost."

Taking a broader view, Rumsfeld cited progress on multiple fronts in the Bush administration's global war on terrorism and said U.S. enemies should not underestimate the willingness of the American people and its coalition allies to suffer casualties in Iraq and elsewhere.

"The progress has prompted a backlash, in effect, from those who hope that at some point we might conclude that the pain and the cost of this fight isn't worth it," Rumsfeld told reporters. "Well, our enemies have underestimated our country, our coalition. They have failed to understand the character of our people. And they certainly misread our commander in chief."

Rumsfeld said the war in Iraq has not created more terrorists there, but he also cautioned that the country needs a more capable security force of its own to eventually defeat the insurgents.

He said interim Prime Minister Ayad Allawi understands the threat from continued instability.

"The prime minister and his team fully understand that it is important that there not be areas in that country that are controlled by terrorists," he said. Later he added, "For their country to succeed, they simply cannot over a sustained period of time have areas that are under the control of people who are violently opposed to that government."

He was referring to major cities like Fallujah and Samarra, where neither U.S. forces nor the Iraqi government are in control.

Rumsfeld also condemned the terrorist attack on a Russian school that killed more than 350 people, including children, and said it underscored how the war on terrorism is a global struggle.

"We saw vividly the extent to which terrorists are willing to go to achieve their ends," Rumsfeld said at his first Pentagon news conference since July 27.

He said the civilized world must stay on the offensive against terrorists.

"There really are no passes in this struggle, no passes for countries, no passes for individuals."

U.S. military deaths top 1,000

By Hamza Hendwai
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — U.S. military deaths in the Iraq campaign passed the 1,000 milestone Tuesday, with more than 800 of them during the stubborn insurgency that flared after the Americans brought down Saddam Hussein and President Bush declared major combat over.

A spike in fighting with Sunni and Shiite insurgents killed seven Americans in the Baghdad area on Tuesday, pushing the count to 1,003. That number includes 1,000 U.S. troops and three civilians, two working for the U.S. Army and one for the Air Force. The tally was compiled by The Associated Press based on Pentagon records and AP reporting from Iraq.

Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld cited progress on multiple fronts in the Bush administration's global war on terrorism and said U.S. enemies should not underestimate the willingness of the American people and its coalition allies to suffer casualties in Iraq and elsewhere.

"The progress has prompted a backlash, in effect, from those who hope that at some point we might conclude that the pain and the cost of this fight isn't worth it," Rumsfeld told a Pentagon news conference. "Well, our enemies have underestimated our country, our coalition. They have failed to understand the character of our people. And they certainly misread our commander in chief."

The Bush administration has long linked Iraq conflict to the war on terrorism. The Sept. Commission, however, concluded that Iraq and Qaida did not have a "collaborative relationship" before the 2001 attacks on New York and Washington, and some have questioned to what extent foreign terror groups are involved in the anti-insurgency in Iraq.

Democratic presidential candidate Sen. John Kerry issued a statement saying the United States joined the friends and families of those who died in mourning their loss.

"Today marks a tragic milestone in the war in Iraq. More than one thousand of Americans and daughters have made the ultimate sacrifice. Our nation honors their service and joins with their families and loved ones in mourning their loss," Kerry said.

"We must never forget the price they have paid. And we must meet our sacred obligation to all our troops to do all we can to make the right decisions in Iraq so that we can bring them home as soon as possible."

The 1,002 figure includes deaths from hostile non-hostile causes since the United States launched the Iraq campaign in March 2003 to topple Saddam's regime. The vast majority of U.S. deaths—138—came after Bush's May 1, 2003 declaration of an end to major combat operations. "Mission Accomplished," read a banner on an aircraft carrier where Bush made the announcement.
