Sole Mays dean candidate Jones stresses familiarity with campus

By Lenae Allen

The sole dean candidate for the Texas A&M Mays Business School, Eli Jones, visited Friday morning to relay his past experiences at other universities, visions for Mays and his action plan should he be chosen for dean.

Jones holds a doctorate in marketing, a master's of business administration and a bachelor of science in journalism, with all three degrees coming from Texas A&M. He is currently the dean of the Sam M. Walton College of Business and serves as the leadership chair at the University of Arkansas.

Jones' seminar stressed the importance of listening to the market, possible contributions to the school and how he looks at education as a 'State of the Black Aggie' featured panels on community involvement

By Sam Scott

A symposium titled "The State of the Black Aggie" hosted students and faculty members in a series of panels Saturday, discussing the current issues and concerns of black students.

The symposium, which was a collaborative effort by the Black Student Alliance Council and the MSC Carter G. Woodson Black Awareness Committee, was moderated by Stephan Lillie, Class of 2009 and former BSAC president, and featured panels on community involvement, academics and accountability.

exchange through Odissi.

"As I have taught all these years at A&M, I have found that when we put up good costumes and dances on stage that it really attracts domestic and international students and then they want to come and learn," Chatterjee said. "This way they then know the tradition of Odissi or the tradition of Indian dances from India, which is a very pure

Divya Chowdhary, finance senior, said some of the Odissi pieces are pure dance while some involve telling a story through movements.

"Every time you're on stage you're in a different mood and portraying the story in a different way, so there is a lot of creativity to it and a lot of expression," Chowdary said.

Chowdhary, who will graduate in May, will also be graduating as a student of Odissi. Chowdhary said she will be moving to New York City and will continue to teach and perform Odissi.

Chatterjee and her students put on various events and workshops throughout the year ranging in size. The most recent show they put on was an audition for Season 10 of America's Got Talent.

Monday is the last day to buy tickets. For more information, contact Aparupa Chatterjee at aparupa.chatterjee@gmail.com or call (979) 492-1751.
