BASEBALL CONTINUED

A&M didn't record its first hit until the fourth inning, but that didn't stop the Aggies from pushing across a run in the first inning. After leading off with a walk and then advancing to second on a wild pitch, Blake Allemand came around to score on an error by Baylor second baseman Duncan Wendel, who overthrew his shortstop on a grounder by Nick Banks that should have ended the inning.

Logan Taylor got the Aggies in the hit column with a double off the end of his bat down the right field line. Taylor advanced to third on a Blake Kopetsky ground out but was left stranded 90 feet from home when Logan Nottebrok flew out to deep left field.

Senior catcher Mitchell Nau, the team leader in batting average, continued his hot start to the season. After Allemand and Ryne Birk both reached with walks, Nau ripped a 1-0 pitch into the left-center field gap for a two-run double. Nau, a native of Spring, Texas, played high school ball just 25 miles down the road from Minute Maid Park at Klein High School.

"I played here two years ago as a freshman," Nau said. "A bunch of my family is here and I know a bunch of people who grew up around here. It's a great environment to get to see everybody. I'm glad we went 3-0."

After seven scoreless innings and just 78 pitches, Kent went back out to the mound to start the eighth inning. After back-to-back singles, Andrew Vinson relieved him.

With runners on the corners, Vinson caught Logan Brown off first base, but Aggie first baseman Nottebrok made a throw home to try and catch Hayden Ross at home. Nottebrok's throw was late and Ross scored while Brown advanced to second. Brown then went to third on a wild pitch and scored on a ground out to first.

With one out in the ninth, pinch-runner Nick Chorby was thrown out on a close call at second base. One pitch later, Nick Banks ripped a two-out triple but was stranded on third.

Sophomore Ryan Hendrix came in to shut the door in the ninth inning. Hendrix picked up his third save of the season and gave A&M its best start since 1989 and its second 16-0 start in program history.

After starting the season winning the most games in convincing fashion, four of the Aggies last seven games have been decided by two runs or less.

"We're finding a way," Childress said of his team's success in close games this season. "We're an older bunch. They don't panic when the games are tight late. We did a little bit there in the seventh inning, but we got it back together and we were able to finish."

A&M returns to Blue Bell Park at Olsen Field at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday to begin a two-game series with UTPA.

MSC names new president

By Katy Stapp

MSC chief administration officer Zach Rozinsky was selected Saturday to lead the 1,300-strong student programming arm for the university as MSC president.

Rozinsky will take office at the first MSC board of directors meeting after Muster on April 21.

Rozinsky was selected due to his experience and his vision for the MSC, said Ryan Trantham, residing MSC president and biomedical sciences senior.

Trantham said the application process for MSC president is unlike the typical election process for other campus leaders and is more extensive. Trantham said the process includes an application listing the goals of each candidate, a presentation given by the candidates and a 30-minute interview with campus leaders, including the current MSC president and the student body president.

"During the deliberation process, we talk about strengths and weaknesses that each candidate possesses, as well as their history, leadership, and their references," Trantham said. "We try to reach as much of a consensus as possible."

Rozinsky said he initially didn't plan on applying for the position.

"I decided to apply because I was not only confident, but I knew that I'd carry out the same goals that the executive team has, considering I'm currently a part of the executive team," Rozinsky said. "So I think continuity is what stood out the most in my application."

Rozinsky said his goals for the MSC can be summed up into three main points — to expand the MSC's reach, to keep up with the changes in the university in order to sustain the MSC's position on campus and to combine primary classroom learning with secondary learning that takes place in the MSC to create a more holistic student experience.

Trantham said the MSC president chiefly acts as a liaison between MSC staff and students, while overseeing three executive vice presidents, each in charge of a section of the MSC responsible for leading different processes affecting all 1,300 students involved with the MSC.

Rozinsky said the most important role as MSC president is advocating on behalf of the MSC members.

"It's important to me to make sure that student voices are always heard," Rozinsky said.

hundreds of people contacting us saying they want to come to one of those. I had a guy who met me just outside of the Rec and said, "I want to come to Camp Brisket," so I looked at Google Analytics and saw that our most requested page was the one for Camp Brisket. The funny problem is, the more you do to celebrate it, the more demand it creates.

THE BATTALION: How has the meat industry changed over the years you've been involved?

SAVELL: I think the biggest thing I've seen is the change in the number of plants or working establishments. There are fewer today, and the one's that are left are bigger. When I was in grad school, or even during my undergrad, we would go to Dallas to the Newhof meatpacking plant. It's where American Airlines Arena sits now, so it's long gone. In Houston, there used to be a lot of plants that were down there. They're all long gone. They just were not efficient. Now when you go, the plants tend to be bigger and more specialized. Sometimes it's from regulatory reasons and sometimes it's just plain economics. Another thing is the growth of super-markets, and the amount of meat that's sold in supermarkets. Even the changes in supermarkets here in Bryan-College Station, there's been almost a complete turnover. There used to be Safeway's, Piggly-Wiggly's, Winn-Dixie. That's changed how we market products.

THE BATTALION: Do you believe we're more of a preventative society when it comes to food scares or are we a reactive society?

SAVELL: My guess is we're more reactionary. Most of the things that have happened, most of the things that have occurred over time have been reactionary. All the HACCP regulations are post 'Jack-In-The-Box' incident. You know, there's a lot of things that we do today that was because of outbreaks. Everybody always talks about how we need to be on the front end of things, how we need to anticipate, but it's almost like life comes too fast.
